Latest Chain Store Scheme Starts With Sanguine Predictions of Its Own Success

Called the "Dailey Grocers," and Headed by D. W. Dailey, a Canned Goods Man With Brief Chain Store Experience. Will Start Ten Stores in Detroit, Mich.

Another chain-store scheme has appeared, under the name of the "Dailey Grocers, Inc." Its headquarters are in Philadelphia, but it proposes to open its first ten stores in Detroit, Mich., for the reason, as it states in its prospectus, that Detroit has fewer chain-stores to the population than any other large Eastern city. Our congratulations to Detroit! "Dailey Grocers, Inc.," is a Delaware corporation with an authorized capital of $500,000. How much is paid in is not known.

The moving spirit in the scheme, and the man whose name it bears is David W. Dailey, who is known in the Eastern canned goods trade as a man who has held some good jobs, but has not held them very long. He was with Thomas Roberts & Co., the Philadelphia wholesale grocers, as manager of the canned goods department. While there he originated Bridal Soup. After he left Roberts & Co. he successively went with Austin, Nichols & Co., of New York, and John T. Connor Co., of Boston, but remained with neither very long. His entire chain-store experience was gained while with the Connor Co., which was, we think, confined to one year.

The concern is now offering preferred stock for sale on the basis of $10 per share, with the usual bonus of common stock. The president is D. W. Dailey, the vice-president C. Sam Marden, and the secretary and treasurer A. W. Norman.

Some selections from the prospectus of the Dailey Grocers, Inc., are as follows:—

Dailey Grocers, Inc., is a Delaware corporation, having a capital of $500,000 divided into $250,000 7 per cent. cumulative preferred stock and $250,000 common stock, in shares of $10 each, par value. Dividends on the preferred stock are payable each half year. The voting power is vested in the common stock. The corporation has been formed to operate a chain of retail cash grocery stores from a central warehouse, under one executive ownership and management and founded upon a basis of quality, service and confidence.

The chain store system is a co-operative method by which the purchase, handling and distribution of supplies are carried out with the greatest economy and efficiency, so that the ultimate benefit derived therefrom is largely vested in the consumer and places within his reach the greatest amount of supplies for the least money. Consequently, this system of retail business is an important factor in reducing the cost of living.

Chain stores have grown greatly in popular favor during the last eight to ten years. An article recently published states that there are about 500 chains of grocery stores in the United States, comprising about 8,000 stores, which is less than 5 per cent. of the 170,000 retail grocery stores in this country, showing that this business is yet in its infancy.

The principal chain store grocers are:—

Jersey City, N. J.: Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., 800 stores.

Philadelphia, Pa.: Acme Tea Co., 315 stores; Wm. Butler Co., 140 stores; Robinson & Crawford, 130 stores; James Bell Co., 130 stores.

Camden, N. J.: Childs Grocery Co., 230 stores.

Detroit, Mich.: C. F. Smith Co., 70 stores.

The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. has paid dividends on $2,100,000 stock since 1906 and showed profits for 1913 of 76 per cent. on the common stock, after paying preferred dividends. The Kroger Grocery and Baking Co. in 1913 showed profits of over 35 per cent. on the common stock, after paying preferred dividends. The other companies do not disclose the details of their operations. The capital stocks of these companies are chiefly held by a few individuals in each case, the large profits realized making the stock valuable and difficult to obtain. It is only when a business of this kind is being established that its stock can be procured at a moderate price and the present offering of the preferred stock of Dailey Grocers, Inc., presents to the investor an unusual advantage and opportunity.

Chain stores are operated upon a spot cash basis, which makes possible a turn-over of the amount of capital invested in merchandise anywhere from eight to twelve times each year, thereby insuring the distribution of goods in a fresh condition. The frequent turning over of capital insures a large annual profit, though the margin of profit on sales may be small. The chain store business is not so susceptible to fluctuation in market prices as that done through wholesalers, as the double profit made by wholesaler and retailer requires a larger margin for operation.

Dailey Grocers, Inc., has been organized by men thoroughly familiar with all the requirements for a successful business. The service of the best operating manager in this line, Mr. David Wm. Dailey, have been secured as general manager for a term of 10 years, the consideration for his services being a proportion of the common stock of Dailey Grocers, Inc. Mr. Dailey will devote his entire attention and utilize his wide and valuable experience solely to the management of the company and for its benefits, without compensation other than the dividends earned and paid on the said stock. In this way a minimum of management expenditure is assured to the stockholders and a maximum of inducement is held out to the manager to produce the best results. An adequate insurance has been placed upon Mr. Dailey's life in the company's favor as protection against an untimely loss of his services. Mr. Dailey and his associates have further purchased a part of the preferred stock for cash at par.

Mr. David Wm. Dailey was with Thomas Roberts & Co., of Philadelphia for over 18 years. In that time he rose from office boy to department manager and introduced many new ideas into the business, including the now famous Bridal brand of goods with the slogan, "The Answer's in the Can." Later, Mr. Dailey was made department manager to Austin, Nichols & Co., of New York, where his earlier successes were continued; still later, he went with the John T. Connor Co., Inc., of Boston, chain store grocers, under a profit sharing contract with a minimum salary of $20,000, $25,000 and $30,000 for three years. His ability to create and design attractive brands and labels is a valuable asset to Dailey Grocers, Inc.

The organizers of the Dailey Grocers, Inc., have investigated carefully the various conditions in the territory available to the chain store business. Of the five largest cities in the Eastern States, Detroit has the largest population for each chain store grocery, and Philadelphia has the lowest, showing that this class of business is well developed in Philadelphia, but only just beginning in Detroit. This company has chosen Detroit for its operation, as it presents greater possibilities than any other field east of Chicago. Detroit shares with Philadelphia the reputation of being a "City of Homes," the percentage of home owners in Detroit according to the 1910 census being 39.1 and for Philadelphia 22.1. This higher percentage for Detroit is partly due to the rapid increase in the population and the greater space available for newcomers. It emphasizes the advantage to the business interests in that their customers are largely permanent residents.

The plan of Dailey Grocers, Inc., is to open the first unit of 10 stores in the month of September, 1915. Fifteen more stores will be started in approximately the next period of three months, averaging one per week, and additional units as rapidly as advisable. The business will be conducted on a strictly cash basis, with particular attention to providing products of an unexcelled quality and the highest class of service to the consuming public. It is conservatively estimated that the average sales of the stores will be $800 each per week. The amount of capital necessary to install the first 10 stores will be $40,000 and for 25 stores about $75,000. By a careful computation based upon actual results obtained by stores heretofore operated under Mr. Dailey, the operations of Dailey Grocers, Inc., are estimated to produce a net profit of $1,000 from three months' operation of 10 stores, equivalent to 10 per cent. per annum upon an investment of $40,000. Three months' operation of 25 stores is estimated to produce a net profit of $12,500, equal to 66 per cent. per annum upon $75,000 of invested capital. Further expansion of the business is expected to yield still higher profits.

About 45 per cent. of the income of the average household is spent on supplies for the home, which represents the amount necessary to maintain life and comfort, so that the chain store is not subject to the elements of uncertainty relating to other businesses. This represents to an investor one of the strongest factors concerning the safety of his investment and an assurance that a certain amount of income can be depended upon at all times.

The advantages offered to prospective purchasers of this company's preferred stock may be summed up as follows:—

1. Security of investment.
2. Practical elimination of management expense.
3. Reasonable certainty of dividends.
4. Exceptional experience and proved ability of the management.
5. Probability of large dividends upon the common stock issued to purchasers of the initial allotment of preferred stock.
6. Assurance of continued business under all conditions.

In 1830 the population of Detroit was little more than 2,000; in 1915 it has an estimated population of over 600,000. In the past year the number of saloons has decreased considerably and the assessed valuation of real and personal property has increased by about $25,000,000. The average weekly payroll of the industrial establishments in Detroit is about $2,500,000. Note that this is per week. It is estimated that 45 per cent. of this is spent for house and home supplies and as there are 2,000 retail groceries in Detroit, including chain stores, the average weekly sales would be about $600 per store. The small retail stores which comprise the greater portion of the 2,000 would be unlikely to run over $100 per week, leaving the larger stores, including the chain stores, an average of over $2,000 per week. The stores of Dailey Grocers, Inc., could handle everything comprised in approximately $1,600 of these weekly sales, but in preparing estimates of its future business, only one-half of this amount has been used, or $800 per week.

The population of Detroit consists largely of the middle class, which devotes the greater proportion of its income to supplies for the home. The large and continuous increase in the population and wealth of Detroit, with the prosperity of its business institutions, bespeaks the success of Dailey Grocers, Inc. Of 16 of the largest cities in the United States, the indebtedness of Detroit is only $18.78 per capita, as against $61.64 for Philadelphia and $212.85 for New York, the other cities coming between these figures. This shows that it is the principle of Detroiters to pay their way, an essential feature to a cash business.

How beautiful is the faith of the promoters of this scheme, who happily assure prospective investors that their ten new Detroit stores will do about $800 per week each and will net $1,000 the first three months!

Dairy and Food Commissioner Says Buy Breakfast Foods in Small Lots.

Also Advises Retailers to Go Slow in Buying New Breakfast Foods for Which There Is No Demand. May Be Necessary, He Says, to Require Cereals to Be Stamped With Date of Packing.

The Dairy and Food Commissioner of Pennsylvania, James Foust, warns retailers to think well before they take up with new breakfast foods that may not sell, and by remaining on the shelves for a long time, become contaminated. He also advises that even those cereals which are in demand be bought in small quantities and turn the stock often. If these warnings are not obeyed, the Commissioner says it may be found necessary to require that packages of cereals have the date stamped on it. It is not easy, be it said in passing, how that could be done under present laws.

The Department has sent this paper the following statement on the subject:—

The Commissioner recognizes the conditions confronting the retailer in keeping his stock of breakfast foods fresh, and wholesalers who make a careful comparison of the 100 to 150 brands of such foods on sale in the State will find that in reality there are only 12 or 15 types of breakfast food that differ at all distinctly one from the other, and yet nearly every week sees community after community canvassed by agents presenting samples of some new breakfast food, taking orders for the same and turning them over to the local grocers supplying these several families, with the demand that he add this new name to his stock, despite the fact that his shelves are already crowded with the 100 other brands. And immediately thereafter the same merchants are induced to stock largely with this new named variety by reason of quantity discounts. The demand for the goods earlier in stock temporarily or permanently stops, but the goods remain on the shelves and are held there for months, or even for years, with the vain hope that the breakfast food fashion may turn and the old stock become salable.

The difficulties of the retailer under these conditions are recognized, but the rights of the consumer for protection against this evil cannot be overlooked. The Commissioner wants every retailer handling cereal goods to understand that the retail stocks in every part of the State are to be thoroughly sampled and sent to State College for a scientific examination and that whenever contamination by bugs, slugs and the like is detected, prosecutions will be instituted in every case and vigorously pressed. This frank note of warning is given so that the retailer may have a fair opportunity to clean up his stock and consign to the dump every package of cereal that is in condition to bring him into trouble because of its lack of freshness or its location near weevilly goods, since even fresh goods may quickly become weevilly if stored in the neighborhood of old packages containing these insects.

Despite the difficulties of these conditions the retailers have a remedy in their own hands, and that is to buy in small quantities, turn the stock often and so have little left long enough upon their shelves to be in serious danger of insect attack. If the retailers, aided by judicious co-operation of manufacturers and jobbers to remedy existing conditions, do not get rid of this evil it is possible that the people may feel it necessary to adopt a remedy proposed in other States against the sale of stale stocks of perishable goods such as these cereal preparations, namely, that of requiring that the package shall bear a stamp indicating the date of manufacture of the goods.

It appears from advices received during the week that Belgium will pack some peas and other vegetables this year. A New York importer when interviewed during the week said that before the war his principal supplies of sprats, peas and other vegetables came from Ostend, Belgium. This factory was found on recent inspection to be in perfect order, and it was expecting to make some pack this season. The principal pack will be vegetables and not sprats, as sprats are very scarce.

A number of large receivers of this city have filed a brief before the Interstate Commerce Commission opposing the plan to reduce the free freight storage time allowed in this city from ten to two days. The principal bearing which the proposed plan would have is upon foreign trade. All of the forwarding agents who handle that line of trade here agree that the reduction of the free storage time limit would work havoc to foreign trade.

The National Premium Advertising Association, about which some mention was made in previous issues, has adopted the following code of ethics:—

1. The aim and purpose of premium advertising shall be to increase the sales of the goods with which premiums are given, to the end that the selling cost of such goods may be reduced.
2. Premiums are a reward for continuous patronage, and shall be standard quality merchandise.
3. No element of chance or uncertainty in the redemption of premium tokens will be tolerated.
4. No untruthful or misleading representations shall be made, either as to premiums or the goods with which they are given.
5. No unfair or oppressive methods shall be employed to promote the sale of either premium goods or service.
6. Premium advertising shall co-operate with all responsible advertising media to increase the efficiency and to elevate the standards of advertising in all its branches.

Constitutional Amendment Asked Allowing Standardizing of Food Products. Code of Ethics of Premium Advertisers. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, N. Y.,

July 2, 1915.

An interesting recommendation was made last Thursday before the Constitutional Convention which is holding sessions in Albany. A plea was made for an amendment to the Constitution which would enable the Legislature to establish a bureau for the standardization of food products.

The argument urged in favor of this amendment was that there is now no code of standards for most food products, although the price depends entirely upon the grade. Buyer and seller frequently disagree as to the grade of a particular article and both would be benefited if there was a statutory standard.

The main purpose of the amendment would be to prevent sellers from using the description "high

WITH THE EDITOR

Almost with every tick of the clock a new chain-store scheme is born.

The Latest Chain Store Scheme.

The latest is the "Dailey Grocers," reported and described in another column. Of course the inspiration is the success of several large chain-store schemes in Philadelphia, New York, Camden and Cincinnati, which have grown into powerful millionaire concerns and are still growing.

The "Dailey Grocers" is headed by a man who has not had much chain-store experience, but who thinks he can enter the field without it and compete with the giants. He opens his first ten stores in Detroit, because there are no chain-stores there to speak of. This may be shrewd and it may be very dull. If Detroit has fewer chain-stores than other cities merely because nobody has happened to go in there and start them, then going in now is a shrewd move. If it comes from the fact that conditions are unfavorable, the "Dailey Grocers" will face a different proposition.

Whether this new half million dollar chain-store scheme succeeds will depend on the way it is managed. This paper does not feel especially sanguine about it, for reasons which need not be gone into. We are inclined to believe that any wise man or group of wise men, with chain-store experience, sagacity, and plenty of money, can go into the chain-store business to-day and make money. Not necessarily in Philadelphia; not necessarily in New York. But in plenty of sections where the chain-store idea has hardly appeared as yet. Each day the thing is getting harder to do, however, and it must be extremely well managed if it is to succeed to-day.

Mr. George W. Drake, secretary of the Western Canning Association, adds something to what has already been said about too many grocers being in the business. His remarks are quite sensational, but we are not prepared to say they are not true:—

A careful investigation of the retailing interests of this country will demonstrate the fact that we have at least five retail stores where we should have only one. This surplus of competition in this regard means but two things: first, the taking from the productive portion of the population 80 per cent. in excess of the needs, which really means the "loaferizing" of the retail business instead of holding it on a plane of active, energetic, business-like management; second, it means the absolute degeneration of quality salesmanship. The experience of a buyer in the average retail store is this: first, after entering the store, you have to hunt up a clerk or the proprietor, who may be found behind the counter, in the back room or some other place equally secluded, unmoved by the approach of a prospective buyer. You have to request him, or her, as the case may be, to please wait on you, and if you do not use the language exactly pleasing, a grouch will show you what you want to look at and be glad when you close the door behind you.

The volume of retail stores in this country makes it absolutely impossible to maintain a competent sales force. The result is that practically anybody is satisfactory who is willing to loaf his time away in the store. In fact, we all know of clerks, so-called, who are working for practically nothing so as to enable their families to get their groceries at wholesale. Now this condition is largely brought about by none other than the wholesalers themselves.

We don't quite believe that four out of every five grocery stores could drop out without injuring the service, although experiment might disclose that the excess is that much. Without doubt there are twice as many stores as there need be, however.

Not long ago a subscriber asked us which we thought was the better plan—to sell absolutely for cash or to limit credits to thirty days. We told him the cash plan was better, and as to the credit limit plan, we said:—

We believe this correspondent will get no relief whatever from attempting to limit his credit to two weeks or a month. He will never in the world be able to work it out. Many men have tried it, but they are always obliged to recede from it almost instantly. As long as the door is open to credit at all, a rule limiting the period is impossible of enforcement.

Several writers have disagreed with us on this. They say of course a retailer can limit his credits—all he needs to do is to say he is going to do it and then do it. Which is obviously true, but it doesn't touch our point at all. Of course it is physically possible for a retailer to limit credits to thirty days. We meant that practically he cannot do it, and we say again that practically he cannot do it. You are a retailer with a good trade among good people. Some of these good people are a little slow; they have fallen into the habit of paying in sixty or ninety days. These people are as good as the Bank of England, and their money is just as sure as the interest on a Government bond.

You make your rule limiting credits to thirty days. They treat the rule in either of two ways: They ignore it and pay exactly as before; or they say to you at once, "it isn't always convenient for us to pay every thirty days. If you want our trade, you'll have to cut that out." Will you lose their trade in either case? Certainly not; no one would. None of the big stores would; none of the small ones could. Every retailer has good people on his books who would take more than thirty days in spite of a dozen rules, and he would let them. If he even lets one do this, his rule becomes no rule at all.

Mr. Edwin B. Pillsbury, of Boston, Mass., does not expect that the weights and measures of the metric system will ever be used in the grocery business. A great many wholesale grocers' associations, inspired by the sanguine and enthusiastic Fred. R. Drake, of Easton, Pa., have adopted resolutions favoring the metric system, but we have never heard any of these organizations seriously discuss the subject. Moreover, not one member of any of them, outside of Mr. Drake, has been courageous enough to start the thing by using metric weight marks on his package goods.

Mr. Pillsbury says:—

Mr. Drake wants packers of food products to place the metric weights on their packages, and I recently had the pleasure of seeing what might be described as a genuine curiosity, a label on a can of corn sold by Mr. Drake's firm, the weight of which was expressed as follows:

Contents
1 lb. 4 oz.
.566 kilograms.

Of course if this label simply read, "contents .566 kilograms," no person not employed in a laboratory would know what was meant. The statements of contents might just as well be left off of the package altogether. The metric system is essentially a laboratory system.

A curious phase of the attempt to get the system introduced into the grocery business is that there is an apparent attempt to place upon the retail grocers the burden of instructing the public as to what the metric system is, something our schools and other institutions have been unable to do in the last 50 years or so.

The retail grocers have all they can do to make a living for themselves and families. They have not the slightest inclination or desire to undertake the job of educating the public in a different system of weights and measures.

There is not, in my opinion, the slightest likelihood that the system will ever become generally used in the grocery trade. If a few faddists want to put the metric terms on their cans or packages, no good will be accomplished nor damage done.

All the resolutions this side of the North Pole or labels on packages will not tend to familiarize the public or the trade with such long, confusing terms as kilograms, decagrams, hectograms, milligrams, kilometers, hectoliters, deciliters and other long and confusing words which are part and parcel of the metric system.

It would take some time for even the grocers to train their lady customers to buying 809-1,000 liters of green peas when they wanted a peck, or to get a small boy to go and buy 4,536-10,000th of a kilogram of butter, when his mother wanted a pound.

There is considerable force in this. The metric system will never be generally adopted, in our judgment, if it is left optional. It would get into use, of course, in a very short time, if a law could be passed making it obligatory, but there is not the slightest prospect of that at the present time.

Butter Interests Said to Be Meditating New Plot Against Oleo.

The "National Provisioner" says that the butter interests have started a new war on oleo. They are going to agree that the 10-cent Internal Revenue tax on colored oleo be repealed, and will then insist on color standards for oleo which will keep it light yellow. Here is the "National Provisioner's" charge

After laying low for some time, the butter interests have started a new "drive" against oleomargarine through legislative channels. That is, they are preparing for such an attack. It takes the form of a bill to amend the Federal law by abolishing the 10-cent tax on colored oleomargarine and establishing a color standard for the latter product.

Talking about there being too many retail stores, undoubtedly a large number of them would have succumbed before this if it had not been for the business created by nationally advertised brands.

Stand every retailer on his own feet and force him to work up his own demand for everything he sells, and undoubtedly many of them would have proven unequal to the task. More money can be made out of nationally advertised brands, with less work, than can be made out of anything else a man can sell.

The new attack is based on the old idea of the "divine right" of butter to a yellow color. The butter people propose a color standard for oleomargarine. They want the latter industry regulated in this way, since they find they can't suppress or discourage it in any other. They would forbid the use of any but a certain light shade of yellow in oleomargarine, while permitting the unregulated use of coloring matter in butter.

Goods That Are Being Advertised to Your Customers

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

The Week's One-Time Ads.

Did you get next to that Wolverine Jr. waste paper baler the other time the Ypsilanti Hay Press Co. had an ad. in about it? Now listen while I tell you about that. It's a little baler for the stores that don't need a big one. Only takes up a space 21 x 18 x 30 inches, but it'll bale 60 to 75 pounds of waste paper as clean and square as a block of concrete. The only way you can sell waste paper is to bale it and the only way to bale it is to have a baler. A little baler like the Wolverine Jr. if you only need a little one, and a bigger one if you need a bigger one. Write the Ypsilanti Hay Press Co., Ypsilanti, Mich., right away. (Golly, I'm glad I don't have to pronounce Ypsilanti.)

You fellows who would like to have motor delivery, but can't quite work up to a regular motor wagon yet, look up the Quick Delivery Van that the Reading Standard Company advertise this week. That's certainly an all right scheme—a three wheel machine that will cover much ground as a motor wagon and carry all you'll need to have a good horse. You can say what you please—the horse is done a delivery proposition. He's too slow he costs too much to keep, and gets sick too easy. Motor delivery is the thing, but a lot of us can't afford a big delivery wagon. I tell them this little Reading Van is exactly what they've been looking for. I don't know what page the ad is on, but you hunt it up.

Sell Her a Whole Container of Franklin Carton Sugar

When you sell a woman a whole CONTAINER of 24 or 30 CARTONS of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR, instead of selling her one CARTON, you prevent her buying the other 23 or 29 CARTONS from a competitor. She's your customer; nobody else can sell her any sugar for some time. She has a supply instead of a sample. You have only one delivery to make, instead of perhaps dozens. You make the profit on every carton in one sale without even having to open the container, although you can do that in five seconds with a pocket knife. You can see that this is the right way to sell sugar because your customers expect to go on eating it all their lives and don't have to "try" it to "see what it's like."

CAPACITIES OF CONTAINERS

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 pounds, according to the grade. CUBE, GRANULATED, and DESSERT & TABLE are packed in CONTAINERS that do not hold too much for a family to buy at one time. POWDERED and CONFECTIONERS' XXXX are also packed in CONTAINERS of small capacity to suit your convenience in buying. Full information on weights of both CARTONS and CONTAINERS can be had from your jobber.

Various Trades Rallying to Fixed Prices.

New York, June 30, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—The all important question of "the resale price" (price maintenance) is now looming up all over the country, as a matter of self-preservation to makers and sellers of standard articles. The committee of "the Chamber of Commerce of the United States," in its report February, 1915, recommending a law authorizing "the resale price," stated: "The business interests of the country, and consumers as well, cannot long fail to take a definite stand on one side or the other. Seldom have they faced a more vital issue."

I take pleasure in sending you the following enclosures: A "letter" to the bookseller, and a "resolution," passed at a meeting of booksellers and publishers, in which the book men declare for the fixed resale price.

Stability of price and protection against cut-throat competition must interest all the merchants to whom you appeal. Urge them to take steps to support "the Chamber of Commerce of the United States" in its efforts to save the retail merchant and all manufacturers from the threatened destruction by cut-throat methods.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES E. BUTLER,

President the Board of Trade of the American Booksellers' Association.

Cleveland Grocers Go to Law Over Sunday Closing.

Cleveland, Ohio, June 25, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Cleveland grocers this week obtained a writ of mandamus to require our police court to issue warrants for the arrest of persons whom they accuse of ignoring the Ohio statute forbidding the sale of goods upon Sundays.

The case involves some unusual features, and I thought that it might interest you. Copy of the opinion of our Court of Common Pleas will be sent you if desired.

Yours very truly,

A. T. HOLMES.

The Ohio law under which this action is taken is interesting; it is much more radical than most States have. The text is as follows:—

Section 13,044. Whoever, being over 14 years of age, engages in common labor or opens or causes to be opened a building or place for Mail Order Insurance.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—My nephew intends to take out a life insurance policy and I am considering for some time the Postal Life of New York City, but want to find out if it is a safe concern. They do not employ agents, and I think their policies are cheaper. In case the company should not be able to continue its business, would the policy holders lose anything? They say all companies must give security to the Government so if they should be forced for any cause they would be secured that none of the policy holders would lose any of their money paid in. It is a company, only ten years old, of course it is not so strong as Prudential, Metropolitan and others. Would you think it would be the same course?

Thanking you, I remain,

Very truly,

SNADER & CO.

We know something of the Postal Life Insurance Co. and its methods. It says it employs ents and sells insurance by mail, though we understand it does have no representatives out. We have no reason to believe that the company is not all right, or that its mail-order scheme is not. The writer has no reason why insurance cannot just as well be sold by mail as through agents. But if you ask if we would take insurance in it, we are afraid we might not, though we do this without the slightest disparagement of the company. The thing is an experiment, and we would not want to experiment with the insurance. It is also a bad plan to try to economize much in taking out life insurance. We would place our insurance in the oldest, strongest companies we could find, and wait until the mail-order experiment had proven itself a little more fully.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We wish to bring to the attention of the trade the fact that a model kitchen, carrying utensils in every-day use, will be sent through Maine this summer, and the first of August an electrical kitchen will be sent along the Massachusetts Coast, perfectly equipped for use.

A demonstrator will go with each and a man familiar with securing trade data, in order that a trade or advertising campaign may be inaugurated in connection with the kitchen.

Owing to the unusually large number of summer visitors in Maine this year, and through our connection with the women's organizations and our co-operation with the Boards of Trade, the kitchen offers a special opportunity to make any class of goods known. If you desire any further information, we shall be glad to hear from you. Very truly yours,

ESTHER TABER FOX,

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

There has been no new development in the tea market during the week, the situation being precisely as it has been for several weeks. The demand for tea is quiet and all values are unchanged, the lower grades being relatively firmer than the better grades. The principal factor in the low grade tea market to-day is the foreign demand. If that, for any reason, should drop off, the market would change in a very short time.

Coffee.

The coffee market has shown some slight firmness during the week, and most grades of Rio and Santos are a small fraction higher. Good roasting coffee is still commanding a premium and is wanted, but the other grades are very quiet. Mild coffees are unchanged and dull. Mocha is tending a little downward. The receipts are increasing, and to come forward the price is considerably less than on spot. Java unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

Sugar unchanged at this writing, although there is some indication of an advance, due to large foreign purchases of American refined sugar. England alone has bought 60,000 tons of American granulated for July shipment with France also coming into the market. All refiners are still quoting 6.10 for granulated, but accepting 6 cents. The consumptive demand for sugar is very fair. Raws are somewhat higher on account of the large foreign purchases of refined, but no material change has occurred as yet.

Syrup and Molasses.

Everything in syrup and molasses is very dull, as it always is during the hot season. Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is wanted only for manufacturing, and of sugar syrup the same thing can be said. Molasses is very dull.

Fish.

Norway mackerel are somewhat firmer than a week ago, although no radical advance in price has occurred. Threes and fours are getting very closely cleaned up. The situation as to Norways is very firm and bids fair to continue so. Irish mackerel are cutting no figure whatever. Cape shore mackerel are in the market to some extent, but are not able to loosen up the tight Norway situation. Cod, hake and haddock are dull and unchanged. Salmon is still inclined to be easy, prices being in buyer's favor, but the trade do not seem to be interested. Domestic sardines are even weaker than they were, and quotations as low as $2.25 for domestic quarter oils are heard. The demand seems to be switching to a great extent to carton goods, owing to the fact that they can now be sold for a nickel. Imported sardines unchanged and quiet, everything being scarce and firm.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes show no change for the week, demand being fair. New pack peas have got down as low as 57½ cents f. o. b. in a large way, and further declines are not unexpected. Reports from the Western pea packing countries, however, tell of bad weather and possible curtailed production. If this prediction comes to pass the price of Eastern peas will undoubtedly advance. Corn of all grades quiet and unchanged. Apples dull at ruling prices, which are still very low. California canned goods are very dull and sick. Opening prices on futures have been cut, and it is hard to tell exactly where the bottom is. This refers particularly to peaches, as cherries are short. Prospects are for a large peach crop, not only in California, but in the East, and this, with the large carry-over, makes the situation very soft. Small Eastern staple canned goods show no change and light demand.

Dried Fruits.

Spot prunes are steady to firm and unchanged in price; demand fair. Future prunes have shown some little fluctuation, but the situation is not materially changed. Peaches, apricots, raisins, currants and other dried fruits are dull at ruling quotations.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are a shade easier for the week; demand fair. Marrows show no change and light request. California limas, green and Scotch peas are all unchanged and comparatively dull.

Butter.

The receipts of butter are about as usual for the season, and the quality is averaging very fancy. This is the result of the recent ideal weather. The consumptive demand is normal and is taking about the usual percentage of the receipts. The balance is going into storage. As the weather gets warmer the demand will probably increase, and it looks like a steady market for some time.

Eggs.

The receipts of fresh eggs are lighter than they have been for two months past. The quality is running good for the season, although not so good as it was in April and May. The consumptive demand is improving and the market is healthy on the present basis.

Cheese.

Cheese is firmer at the recent advance of 1 cent per pound. The consumptive demand is increasing considerably, and the make is about normal for the season. Some teas are still being sold for export, and the whole situation is firm and healthy. If there is any change, it is likely to be a slight advance.

Provisions.

There is only a fair demand for the various cuts of smoked meats all of which are steady at about unchanged prices. Pure lard and compound are steady and unchanged with only a moderate demand. Dried beef, barreled pork and canned meats are unchanged and in fair demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS

Rice.

Former characteristics prevail in this market, and while buyers are disposed to operate on conservative lines, they evince confidence in the general situation. Stocks in hands of dealers and grocers are steadily working down and a little more activity is anticipated. Japans and screenings are in request for export, as well as home requirements.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast report that conditions remain unchanged, with no likelihood of improvement until crops start to move. Screenings now being offered to this section are not receiving the usual attention, as the trade are beginning to realize relative value of better grade especially in Carolina, and are taking little more of this style.

At new Orleans the trade are giving Honduras more attention, although there is a better inquiry for Blue Ros Japans and screenings, which, due to their scarcity, are difficult to obtain, and prices are being well maintained. In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, reports show some few sales have been consummated. Holders of rough rice are displaying no inclination to trade and very few lots have changed hands. The weather continues favorable for the growing crop, though some sections report that rains may be needed within the next week or days.

D. TALMAGE'S SONS CO.
New York and New Orleans.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The market situation presents practically no change whatever this week. In spite of the lot of unreasonable weather, business in our line continues quite fair. In fact, good in some of our lines.

There is no catch of sardines or sprats anywhere just now, except in Norway, where the summer fishing is in full swing, but so far the catch is not satisfactory. Our friends in Norway have so far asked what we consider reasonably high prices for their goods. Norway, principally because they have such an enormous demand from Germany and other countries at war. Our last report from our agents in Norway now state that the demand from Germany has ceased, why, of course, we do not know, but it is the fact, nevertheless, and we therefore are hopeful that our Norwegian friends will now begin to realize that they will have to come down from their high prices if they want to interest the large American buyers, unless, of course, the catch should prove a failure, which we hope it will not be. Stocks of all kinds of sardines here are rather unimportant, and of sprats they are practically cleared, with the exception of some tomato sprats, which are also selling in a hand-to-mouth way, and when those are gone the market will be absolutely bare of sprats and no further supplies can be expected before the end of the year, when the catch usually starts to gain in France, but whether there will be any packing of any consequence, it will depend entirely upon the trend of war.

Portuguese sardines are getting quite scarce, especially as new shipments are not arriving, there being no catch in Portugal at the present time and prices here have advanced all along the line.

STROHMEYER & ARPE CO.

New York.

Standard Canned Goods.

Inquiries for tomatoes out of the 1915 pack were much in evidence last week. It looks like the long looked-for interest in them is about to materialize. The canners are in a receptive mood and the quotation for the No. 2 size is now on a level with spots, which cannot but help create a healthy buying condition. No. 3 size can now be secured at a concession of 2½ cents per dozen, and in consequence the canners are expecting orders to boom up largely.

The growing crop is in good shape, although reports indicate the acreage is not as large as in previous years.

Spot tomatoes continue to hold the jobbers' attention, and the buying is more spirited than last week. The prices are the same as yet, but something may happen soon to cause a rise. A notable feature in this connection is that several well-known brands, largely held, have been sold out, although there are still some good tomatoes to be had. This illustrates, however, that spots are being slowly cleaned up.

String beans attracted much attention this week, from both canners and jobbers. The quality is excellent, and the found friends quickly at the very attractive prices quoted. They certainly look like a good buy. Sweet potatoes continue in good demand and the price has advanced. Futures look attractive and the interest in them increased this week.

Cherries, both white wax and red, are being freely bought, as well as new packages of blackberries and black raspberries. Pears and apples are nearly cleaned up. Peaches, both spot and futures, are quiet. Pineapples are at a standstill except pie grated, which are very scarce. Cove oysters are nil, but prices are the same.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The evaporated apple market continues quiet here, but every one is very firm and they are confident that we shall have higher prices later on.

A fair demand is noted from the jobbing trade for small quantities at 7 to 9 cents per pound, according to quality. Very few carload lots are being sold.

The future market is very strong so far as asking prices are concerned. Sellers want on the basis of 8 cents for prime quality in 50-pound boxes. While there is very little demand at this, sellers consider crop conditions too poor to warrant their taking less.

Spices.

The market is very interesting, inasmuch as we are just ending a period of six months in which we have seen active trading in all articles. Stocks in this country are becoming lower every day. The tendency is upward.

Pepper.—There has been no change in this article since our last report. Prices are considered low. No fresh arrivals are expected in this country before November or December. Considering the low stocks, we expect to see higher prices ruling.

Cloves.—Lower in price, with only fair demand. Stocks at present exceedingly low and higher prices are anticipated.

Mace.—Very scarce and dull. Unlikely to show any change in the near future.

Nutmegs.—Prices are slightly easier notwithstanding the fact that supplies have been greatly reduced in all markets.

Cassias.—In fair demand. Higher prices in China, though some low prices have been named ex-dock New York.

Green Ginger Root.—There have been no arrivals as yet. The first consignment is expected to be in in a week. Some low prices have been named, but higher ones are expected as the season rolls on.

Paprika.—Prices unchanged. Market running along its usual course.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—There has been another advance in caraway and it is predicted that we will see still higher prices. Anise slightly easier. There has been no change in poppy this week.

Here is a store fitted with Baines' Brackets. Our word for it, there are at least 25 per cent. more goods on the shelves here than there can possibly be on the shelves of any similar store using the old style shelves. No crowding either.

The point about Baines' Brackets is that they hold up the shelves without uprights. That gives you the use of the whole unobstructed shelf length, and not only greatly improves the appearance of your stock, but gives you a place for at least one-fourth more goods.

A Lesson in Selling Goods.

This is going to be a lesson in selling goods, by one of the best salesmen in the world, which same is little me. If I do say it as shouldn't, I am a lovely salesman. Honest, I believe if I tried to, I could sell a dead cat to the President. The bottom of all selling of goods—here begins the lesson—is to give reasons why a man ought to buy your goods. I can think of a bushel of reasons why the President ought to buy a dead cat from me. The first is that he ain't got one now, and the second is that I need all the money I can get. It would pay everybody in the Government to give me all the money they could, so's I could pay an income tax and help things out.

As for the lesson, I feel it's needed, and I feel there's nobody any better fixed to give it than me. When I talk about selling goods, I mean selling goods over the counter. You fellows unfortunately ain't as well fixed as I am when it comes to selling goods. I sell a justly celebrated line that everybody wants to buy. I don't have to sell 'em—they sell their own selves—gee, I wish I could name their name! It's a shame; the editor's as mean as blue mud about things like that.

Why the goods I sell are so popular that men come up to me in the street and threaten to smack me in the face unless I sell 'em. Think of that. Of course I don't like to be smacked, so I give in.

You fellows just sell ordinary goods and it ain't that way with you. So the more you can know about selling goods the better.

A whole lot of retailers lose tricks by not talking right to the people that come in their stores. The other day I was standing in one store when a husky lad about 16 came in for something for his mother. He was just where he thought he was a real man and where he was ready to get up on his hind feet to anybody that treated him like a kid.

"Well, bub, what is it?" said the grocer. "Bub" to a real man—can you get that? The kid turned sour in a minute—you could see it. From now on he's out to do that store. Maybe he can't do any hurt, and then maybe he can.

What he ought to been called is mister. Call that kid mister and he'd save up his own nickels to come in and buy goods of you, so he could hear himself called it over and over.

The same thing happened with a girl in another store a week before when I was in there.

A girl about fifteen, already wondering when she was going to be married, came in and got called "sissy" by the grocer. She could have poured acid in his eyes. "Sissy" to a young lady thinking about getting married! Think she'll want to go there again? Why she'll sidestep it any way she can and the easiest way she can do it is to go to some other store.

"Miss Jones" is what she ought to have got called. Call her that and she'll love you to death, and talk at home about how gentlemanly a man Mr. Smith is. "I like him." It's all good business, gents. You can't afford to have even a boy or girl down on you. You can't afford to have anybody down on you. Don't you forget that the boy and girl are going to grow up and be in the market. If they're down on you now they'll be down on you then.

Every day I see breaks like this. Only yesterday I saw an old fellow that looked like he thought he was President of Heaven walk into a store to buy something. You could see right away that he thought he ought to have a fence built around him. The grocer called him "doc"! A blind man could see how he liked it—not. It was just as easy to call him doctor. That sent him out all ruffled up.

Women are queer things. They have to be treated right, or they talk all over town against you. There's as many kinds of women as there's kinds of dress goods, and then some. You can get fresh with some of 'em, and get away with it, but if you try to get fresh with the others you're in wrong in seconds.

You'd think anybody with half an eye could tell the difference, and yet I know one grocer that gets fresh with all the women. Make no difference who they are or what they are—he's there with his little jollies, and if they don't like them he can lump it. The worst of it is

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Watermelon Display.

Make a display out of the first batch of watermelons you get. Have your window in shade as much as possible and first make two broad steps to fit the window and cover them with green crepe paper. Arrange along the very front of the window a melon in eight slices, then on the first shelf place the halves of three melons, and on the top step place two whole melons on each side. Then in the centre of the top shelf place a very large melon on blank scale, with placard like illustration. Be sure the melon is firmly held in place and is exactly in the center, so that it will not roll. Have your customers guess the weight of the melon and put their answers with their names and addresses, in a box and then give the melon to the person giving the correct answer or nearest answer. Hold this contest for three or four days, as you see fit. This is the way to make the blank scale. Use a corn box and make the lid extend about four or five inches at the bottom. A little stick nailed to the inside of the box and to the extended end (as this will hold it in position) can be used to form the front of the scale, thus making a slant from the edge at the top. Take a piece of wood the size of the top of the box and fasten it to the top of the box, but between these two nail a small block of wood to give the scale effect, about three inches high. Cover the box, top, block and all with black glazed paper. Now cut the dial from white cardboard, paste in the center of the slant and cut eight little arrows from tinfoil, pasting them on the dial.

318.—The Danger of Giving Employees a Share in One's Business.

Almost every few minutes, it seems to me, I come across a kind-hearted employer who wishes to give his employees an interest in his business. Usually he will do it by incorporating his business and giving so many shares of stock to the favored employees. Occasionally it is done by making a partnership out of it and giving the employees a small minority interest. In all these cases the employer figures that he will still control the situation, because if it is a corporation, he will be the majority stockholder, and if it is a partnership, he will hold the dominant interest.

I have helped to carry a considerable number of these philanthropic deals through, but never without clearly explaining to the employer the chance he was taking when he put his employees in a position to annoy him. Sometimes when this possibility was explained, the employer changed his mind and arranged his benefactions in another way. Others went ahead and took the chance, and one in particular who did this, got into the precise tangle which I had advised him he might get into. I am going to use his case as a sort of horrible example. My object is to make the employer who reads these articles understand that the employee who receives a share in his business is not always consumed with gratitude, and sometimes uses in a very cold-blooded fashion the weapon which the employer has himself put into his hands.

The man I speak of had a good-sized retail business, employing about fifteen clerks. He had grown well-to-do and like many another, wished to reward some deserving employees, chiefly his older clerks and his head bookkeeper. He decided to turn his business into a corporation and to present each of the employees in question with a little block of five shares of stock. He was advised of the possibilities of this, but felt sure that "the boys" would be so grateful that they would never do anything against him. He took the chance, the business was incorporated and the stock issued to about five employees.

Nothing happened for a year, or until the first annual meeting of the corporation. The question of declaring a dividend came up, and at once the trouble began. It became disclosed for the first time that one of the oldest clerks—one of those receiving stock—had long disagreed, secretly, with his employer's method of conducting the store. He had no right to object before, but he was a stockholder now, and he said what he had to say and said it rather offensively. The old employer was much shocked, and retorted sharply. To make a long story short, the clerk-stockholder eventually began suit against the corporation and its officers, on the ground that the enterprise was being mismanaged, that exorbitant salaries were being paid, that the assets were being wasted, and the interests of the stockholders were being sacrificed. He moreover got an order from the court compelling the corporation to let him examine the books, and he marched in the office with his accountant day after day in the most aggravating fashion.

Altogether it was one of the most distressing experiences that this employer ever had. Through it all, the clerk did nothing which any minority stockholder cannot always do to harass the majority. He can always object to the way the business is being conducted; he can always bring suit on some such grounds as the above; he can always get an order from the court permitting him to examine the books, if his object is to get information with which to protect his own interests as a stockholder. In short, a minority stockholder in a corporation, while he can be outvoted on every occasion, has a very considerable power for trouble and annoyance.

That is one risk which every employer takes when he gives employees stock in his business. It can very easily be avoided. An employer instead of giving an employee stock, can give him the benefit of the stock. That is, he can set aside a block of stock for the benefit of the employee, who collects the dividends from it, but does not vote it. The employee, while getting just as much from the stock as if he owned it, is not a stockholder, and his capacity for harm is no greater than when he was merely drawing a salary. I always recommend that the thing be done this way, and have no doubt that a lot of trouble could be saved had this advice always been followed.

The employer who gives an employee a small partnership interest in his business, is taking the same risk in a somewhat different way. He can accomplish almost the same result by giving his employee a share in the profits, which of course does not admit him to partnership.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Information Signs. — Information signs are signs that tell about things that are out of sight. We used to stop selling horse radish in May. Cut out dill pickles in June. Would never think of offering loose mince meat in summer. Handled celery in cool weather only. We allowed our smeared friends to go without their Saturday treat on account of the hot weather, and so on.

Framed information signs placed around the store tell people these things are in stock—in the cooler. Just because it "isn't the custom" to carry them in the summer is the very reason your store should do it. They will command a better price, too, and rightly, because it costs more to handle them. Besides, isn't it a good ad. for a store to get the name of carrying goods that are, ordinarily speaking, out of season? Won't Miss Clara's young friends, who "just dearly love dill pickles," ask her where she buys them, and is it not a bit likely that a few mothers will be asked to put them on their list?

Summer Eating.—What a difference it makes when you meet people half way. A well-displayed line of light-eating things just now pays well. A can of tuna fish is picked up here, a can of lobster there, a can of crab meat or shrimp another place, and in between these you have your salad dressing and olive oil. The whole display is so very suggestive, especially when a few heads of lettuce are moved with it, that folks simply "must have these things."

Your Worst Fault Is Inaccuracy. Thus a certain clerk was addressed long ago. It is such a decided failing of his that he is practically out of line for promotion. He is the type who forgets things, who gets prices wrong, who gets your ideas wrong, and who is otherwise very intelligent and very active, yet inaccurate. Jumps at things. Doesn't think.

If any of you know yourself to have this drawback get yourself together, to speak, and shake off the habit. Realize that confidence and promotion go hand-in-hand, and this confidence is the result of doing things right. Have pride in carrying out orders promptly and correctly. If you fail to do it and feel humiliated, you are on the right way, but if you experience no regrets for your inefficiency, you are to be pitied.

strong campaign of education along these lines. Mr. George B. Woodburn is the matter in charge.

The Clearfield Chamber of Commerce will install a credit rating system for the protection of the business men.

Greenville merchants are availing themselves of the facilities offered by the New York packing company, which combines all packages and forwards them in one shipment, either by express or freight, thus saving money to the merchant.

Columbia merchants are interested in the "Buy at Home" campaign.

New Castle merchants have sent State Secretary Howes a check for $42 as a nucleus for a legislative fund to be used as necessity requires. The gift is conditioned that other associations cooperate, if not, the money reverts to the New Castle Association.

This is a step forward; if we expect to secure legislation we must have money for publicity and other purposes. If each merchant in the State would add on a dollar we would have a fund big enough to do things with. Who will follow New Castle's example?

Atlantic City grocers and butchers have formed an association for mutual protection. Ninety-three members have been enrolled. Officers have been elected as follows: President, Joseph Myers; vice-president, D. J. Lewis; secretary, E. Deutsch; treasurer, N. Ager. The following Committee on By-Laws has been appointed: I. Blumberg, chairman; Joseph Shapiro, Geo. S. Brooks, L. Thompson, G. Hausen, W. H. Smith, L. Fishman and J. Shill. Mr. Smedley was present by invitation on June 23d and addressed a big audience at Curry's Hall. The meeting was marked with much enthusiasm and unless all signs fail, a good association will be the result.

The next big event on the association calendar will be the annual convention of the State Retail Merchants' Association. This event has been arranged for September 7th, 8th and 9th at Exposition Park, Conneaut Lake, Meadville. A big attendance is expected. The following committee on programme has been selected: Wm. Smedley, chairman; J. A. Edgar, A. Kaiser, Philadelphia; J. W. Kendall, Warren; H. W. Shaffer, Lock Haven; Theodore Landsberg, Erie, and C. M. Wessels, Philadelphia. The committee desire suggestions from the members at large. What topics do you want on this programme, Mr. Merchant? Let us hear from you. An effort will be made to make this the best yet held. There should be a large attendance. This year delegates will receive a portion of the mileage expense back, as under the Pennsylvania Plan $700 has been appropriated for this purpose.

The summer season usually means that regular meetings of the association are abandoned. Interest in organization

WRIGLEY'S spear—the sign of the perfect gum in the perfect package—has pointed a way of happiness to millions of people; not only those who have bought and enjoyed the best chewing gum made—but those who have sold it—the Retail Merchants.

The wonderful WRIGLEY distribution—so complete that any person in any corner of the United States has but to step into the nearest store to find WRIGLEY'S SPEARMINT or WRIGLEY'S DOUBLEMINT—is convincing proof of the necessity and value of dealer co-operation—without which, one of the heaviest advertising expenditures in the world would fail to secure maximum results.

Through the Pennsylvania Plan we hope to show the merchants of Pennsylvania not only that we believe in them, but that real co-operation between manufacturer and merchant means better stores, increased sales and greater profits.

Don't forget that the more prominently you display it, the more benefits and profits you will get from this most widely advertised product in the world.

should be kept alive, nevertheless. During the period of vacation plans should be formed for aggressive work in the fall. Many associations have arranged for outings and picnics. Associations, to be worth anything, should be kept alive.

Mr. Smedley addressed the newly organized Plymouth Association on June 30th.

Many associations are working hard to secure a share of the Pennsylvania Plan money.

The big excursion of the Frankford Association is scheduled for July 28th. The place, Atlantic City. If the weather is good there will be a record breaking crowd.

The Frankford Association has recently admitted 34 new members.

The Johnstown Merchants' Credit Bureau is doing good work for its members.

The Kittanning Association is forging ahead. Recently a committee from this organization visited the Butler grocers to learn something of the methods employed by them.

The Minersville Association is gaining steadily in membership and influence. It has attacked the peddling evil and is striving to eliminate this evil without any bad effect on the home merchant. The association is preparing for a big Fourth of July celebration. There is a great get-together spirit all over the town. A prize essay contest on "Home Buying" is now under way.

Mt. Carmel Association has decided to observe half holiday weekly during the latter half of June and all of July and August. Stores will be closed all day July 4th and Labor Day. The association will picnic on August 11th at Maysville Park. H. J. Kimmell, the secretary, has been elected a delegate to the State convention.

The Pittsburgh Butchers' Association will enroll as members the butchers of Homestead, Duquesne, Turtle Creek and all towns near Pittsburgh. The Homestead butchers recently tendered a complimentary dinner to the Pittsburgh Association. The Pittsburgh butchers will picnic at Kennywood Park on July 28th. There will be an ox roast, bicycle races and a big ball game.

The Pittston Association will picnic at Valley View Park on Wednesday, August 4th. A big programme of sports has been arranged and about $100 in merchandise will be given as prizes. Pittston expects to be well represented at the State convention.

Mr. Smedley will address the Manheim Merchants' Association on July 15th.

There should be an attendance of 1,000 merchants at the State convention. Will you be one of the number?

Bland, Va., May 27, 1915.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Gentlemen:—We inclose for your criticism a small circular. This helped business and cleaned up quite a lot of odds and ends. Money is so scarce, we did not do near the business we would had times been good. We are thinking of having another after lambs are sold. The past 18 months has been the worst in my experience.

Yours truly,
F. A. CRABTREE.

The circular enclosed was small, measuring 5½ x 8 inches; paper rather poor. Here is the slightly reduced reproduction:—

I assume that these are odds and ends, gathered from the different departments of the store for a clean-up sale. I would have said that. People seem to have more confidence and buy quicker in bargain sales like that, than in bargain sales which are held for any of the innumerable other reasons.

I think these goods should have been described more in detail. What kind of slippers? What kind of hats? What kind of dress distract her, and she doesn't do. You lose that sale. On the other hand, look at it this way. Suppose foulard is what she wants, and you say in your advertisement that you are selling foulards in the sale. Ten chances to one she will go right down town to your store. I should always describe the goods so that everybody knows fairly well what they are.

I would have made this circular go a little further. Instead of merely saying, "All Dry Goods and Notions 10 per cent. off," I would have gone on to say, "Such as the following":—and given maybe a list of ten articles showing a 10 per cent. reduction. I would also have offered probably twice as many things.

I have noticed that all the successful advertisers who pull special sales, go through one stage that I have no doubt they have found helpful—they systematically work up and play up the sale. They will begin to talk about it several days before it opens, telling how long they have been preparing for it, what lengths they went to, how they went about it, and so on. Of course the purpose is to whet the public appetite, and I have no doubt it does it. It gives the sale an importance—makes an event of it. Mr. Crabtree will find this idea as useful to him as to anybody. He has not applied it at all in the above circular. Without any playing at all he announces his sale and off the reel. I suggest that he try the other plan and see if he does not get more out of it.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter, in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

BIG CLEAN UP SALE

Beginning on Thursday, May 20th, and ending on Monday, May 24th, we will sell for Cash or Good Produce the following goods:

- 7 pairs Old Ladies' Slippers, former price $1 35, in this sale 75c.
 - 8 pairs Misses Slippers, former price $1.25, sale price 69c.
 - 40 pairs Men's and Boy's Shoes $1 25 to $2 50, sale price 98c.
 - $75.00 worth of Ladies' Misses and Children's Hats 25 to 50 per cent off
 - $250.00 worth of Mens' and Boys' Suits and Pants at Cost.
 - A lot Ladies' Dress Goods at 25 per cent under former price.
 - 10 dozen Men's dress and work Shirts at 39c each.
 - 25 Men's $1.00 dress Shirts for 79c each.
 - All Dry Goods and Notions 10 per cent off.
 - Other articles too numerous to mention.
- Come one, come all, and take advantage of these LOW PRICES.

F. A. CRABTREE & CO.,
Effna, - - - - - Virginia.

Mr. Crabtree says this circular pulled. If it did, it would probably have pulled better if it had been a little fuller. I would have made it about twice this size, and would have made the printer use a little more taste in its arrangement. A border would have helped, and a little different method of arranging the offerings. The reason for the sale deserves a little more explanation.

goods? This is the psychology of a condition like this: A woman in your town is in the market for a certain kind of dress goods. She sees your advertisement. It says "Ladies Dress Goods," which may or may not include the kind she wants. She thinks "I'll look into that and see if my kind is in the sale," but before she can get around to it a hundred things happen to Does $175 Mean Anything to You Fellows With Windows?

If it does, go in the Lipton Tea window dressing contest, for $175 is what we'll give away in prizes.

Two strong reasons why you should make a Lipton Tea display now-- 1, they're doing a lot of advertising to your customers, and a display will yoke you up with it; and 2, it's the iced tea season. These reasons would be big enough without the $175.

Here are the terms and conditions:—

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	=	=	=	=	$75
For the Second	=	=	=	=	$50
For the Third	=	=	=	=	$25
For the Fourth	=	=	=	=	$15
For the Fifth	=	=	=	=	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes September 1, 1915.

Two Hundred "Turnovers" a Year

Two hundred times a year you turn over capital invested in Fleischmann's Yeast—

that's about an average.

True, the amount involved is small but the principle is profitable and there's not one cent's worth of dead stock, waste, or loss to figure.

HOW DO YOU DO

when you are up against the grouchy customer, the fellow who over runs his account, the transient cash buyer who only drops in occasionally, the person who always disputes his bill, and up against other troubles when you do not have our

How About Yourself?

If you eat cereals yourself, have you ever eaten anything as much and as continuously as Wheatena? Wheatena is the cereal that people don't seem to tire of. It sells and repeats month after month and year after year. The hearts of fancy wheat-grains. We pack Wheatena almost as if it was jewelry, and guarantee it no matter whose hands it is in.

Bought Simply Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

Frauds Still Exist in Manufacture of Noodles and Macaroni

Mostly Consist of Use of Dye to Make Eggless Noodles Look as if Eggs Had Been Used and to Make Macaroni Which is Made from Poor Wheat, Look as if Fine Durum Had Been Used. Hard for Honest Manufacturers to Compete.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

July 8, 1915.

Recent activity on the part of certain noodle and macaroni manufacturers in selling noodles artificially colored yellow as "egg noodles" when they contain little or no egg, has led the Federal and State food officials to seek means of stopping this fraudulent traffic. It is the custom in taking up matters of this kind to afford an opportunity for a hearing to all manufacturers and other interested parties in order to permit them to present reasons for or against trade practices. Accordingly the Joint Committee on Definitions and Standards, representing the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials, the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and the United States Department of Agriculture, recently held a hearing in order to secure all possible information in regard to the manufacture of noodles, macaroni and similar alimentary pastes.

It was brought out at the hearing that fraudulent practices have crept into the manufacture of noodles, macaroni and spaghetti which make it difficult for reputable manufacturers of unadulterated goods to meet the competition of the cheapened product, whereby the consumer receives an article that contains foreign coloring matter but much less nutritive substance than the genuine noodles or macaroni he expects to receive. Good egg noodles should contain a substantial amount of egg, but articles labeled "egg noodles" which contain only a trace of egg and in some instances none at all have been put on the market. The eggless "egg noodles," for example, are artificially colored yellow by means of a dye, so that to the uninitiated they look exactly like the noodles that contain real egg. Some manufacturers have been unable to see why they should add eggs at from 30 to 50 cents per dozen when the same characteristic yellow can be obtained by the addition of a dye at a cost that is comparatively negligible. Where the output of a factory is large, the illegitimate profits made by substituting yellow dye for eggs may be very great.

If noodles were sold merely for ornaments it might make little difference to the purchaser whether the yellow came from an egg or from a dye, but when considered as food, whether or not they contain any eggs or enough egg to be of value as food, is important. For it is possible to make yellow noodles without any eggs at all and also to spread one egg over a great many noodles and add enough dye to give an attractive color. It was important, therefore, to find whether a mere suspicion of egg employed in an attempt to escape the law on a technicality would be considered in the trade justification for calling the product "egg noodles."

Dye has been used also for the purpose of deception in the manufacture of macaroni. The best grade of macaroni is made from the semolina of Durum wheat. This semolina is rich in gluten, which consists of the nitrogenous substances of the grain, and is high in food value. This wheat has its own characteristic yellow color, which is rightly associated in the minds of purchasers with the highest grade products. The yellow color, however, can, like that of the egg, be accurately reproduced by use of certain dyes. It has become the practice for certain manufacturers to make macaroni from grades of flour which are much less expensive than those from which macaroni is customarily made. This cheap substitute is artificially colored, by the addition of a dye, to look so nearly like the high grade, genuine Durum semolina macaroni that the ordinary purchaser is completely deceived.

Artificial coloring matter in noodles and macaroni serves no useful purpose whatever. It is added solely for the purpose of deception. Even a harmless dye adds nothing in the way of taste or nourishment. An easy way to determine whether macaroni and noodles have been artificially colored is to examine the water in which they have been cooked; if they have been artificially colored with soluble dyes the water will be yellow. This, however, is not an infallible test, as some of the yellow dyes employed do not dissolve or color water.

The investigations made by the Department of Agriculture have also shown that there is a very great difference in the amount of moisture in macaroni, noodles and similar alimentary pastes now on the market. Water added in excessive amount and sold at the price of macaroni is even more profitable than dyed dough at the price of noodles.

Those who appeared at the hearing before the Committee on Definitions and Standards agreed to in order to put competition with the industry on a fair basis, and guard the interests of the consumers, definitions should be adopted that would absolutely prohibit use of artificial coloring, fix a minimum egg requirement for articles sold as egg products, and also fine the amount of moisture that may be permitted in the product. What these limitations and requirements shall be is now being considered by the Committee on Definitions and Standards.

Retail Clerks Who Can Sell Goods

Some Examples from a Recent Clerks' Contest Which Show the Value of Systematic Effort to Make Sales of Goods Which Customers Have Not Asked For.

A clerks' contest was held recently in Canada, in which prizes were offered to the three clerks who by personal experiences would show that they possessed the quality of salesmanship. We propose to reproduce the three personal experiences which got the prizes, not because they are anything very wonderful, but because they do show that a good live clerk who starts out to sell goods can usually succeed:—

THIS PAPER DREW FIRST PRIZE.

Having received 100 pounds of a certain brand of shortening, which was a new article coming into our store for the first time, I decided to spend one week in creating a demand for it.

One bright and sunny Monday morning a woman walked into our store, and stepping up to the counter, I said to her: "Good morning, Mrs. Thompson, this is an exceptionally fine morning for April," to which she replied that it was grand. She opened her purse and took from it a slip of paper, which was an order she requested to be sent to her.

On reading her order, and on excusing myself for interrupting her, I said: "I would like to show you a new line of shortening we have just in. I know you will like it." Taking a package from the refrigerator and opening it to show her, I said: "This is 3 cents a pound cheaper than lard and you can get better results with one-third the quantity than with lard. If you take this home and do not find it as I say, I will gladly refund you any loss you may have had through it." "All right," she said, "send it along." She came into the store a few days later and told me she never had better pastry. She never did better cooking in her whole cooking experience and she had told several neighbors about it—she was so enthused about this shortening. I never lost a customer in the week that I pushed the sale and I never had a dissatisfied customer; also through the influence of our customers we sold a quantity to others.

We gained a great deal of trade through this, as people realized we were giving them something good quality, and also saving them money, and they appreciated my interest in them by telling me that I gave them pure goods and at less money when I sold them this brand of shortening. I sold about 100 pounds in five days.

THIS PAPER DREW SECOND PRIZE.

A short time ago a certain milk firm put on in this city a special selling campaign for one week, offering a prize to the clerk in each store who sold the most of the products during the one week. Their chief lines were flour, farina and rolled oats. This meant that practically every grocery clerk in the city was out for this prize.

By the following methods I was able to sell $106 worth of the goods in all. I made it my business to mention these lines to all who came in. I explained to them that the goods were put up for them which meant more work for less help; that the quality was No. 1 and pointed to the fact that the goods were being extensively advertised. I had a sample of each line on the counter, and took good care to show them to all. By this time in almost every case the customer became interested, when I would then mention the prices. Most of the resulting sales were for small quantities, which meant a large percentage of these customers buying.

THIS PAPER DREW THIRD PRIZE.

A short time ago our firm received a consignment of dried peaches. While the fruit was appetizing enough to the sense of smell it did not prove very tempting

Mr. Merchant: United Coupons will help you get 100 per cent. of your customers' trade

Mr. Merchant, of course you know that you do not get all the trade of even your steadiest customers.

You know that if every family on your books would buy all its groceries of you, you would be very much more prosperous.

Mr. Merchant, the United Profit-Sharing Plan will help you get all the trade of all your customers.

The United Premium Catalog, giving a list of the goods now containing United Coupons, goes to millions of homes, many of them the homes of your customers.

This catalog tells them to buy such goods as teas, coffees, baking powder, soap, etc., etc., "from their own dealer."

That's you, Mr. Merchant.

Unlike most catalogs, this catalog helps you. It does not take trade out of your town. It brings it in.

This trade will come to you if you stock and feature goods containing United Coupons—goods the United Premium Catalog makes people want to buy.

The manufacturer pays for these coupons, not you. He packs them with his goods as a part of his advertising appropriation spent for your benefit in your store.

The manufacturers are your friends. They want to help you win back the 52% of profitable business that belongs to you but is going to the big mail order houses.

Give the United Plan a fair trial. Get the catalog and its list of profit-sharing goods. Your name on our list will bring you free information about the plan and will show you the premiums your customers can get without cost to you.

appearance. However, it had to be sold, so I cast about for some method of introducing it to the customer other than by the ordinary one of simple display.

Securing a pint sealer I thoroughly soaked overnight what I considered would be enough of the fruit to fill it. In the morning I was amazed to find how the uninviting peaches had expanded to a surprising size, and great was my delight when on boiling and putting them 'up in the sealer in the regular way, I discovered how really fresh and tempting they looked.

An equally important discovery was the astonishing fact that only half of the quantity I had at first thought enough was necessary, and this impressed me as an excellent selling factor.

This sealer of fruit was placed conspicuously on the counter beside the dried peaches, and frequently, with the addition of aptly-written and neatly placed cards, succeeded in making a sale by itself through merely exciting the customer's curiosity and attention and without any formal introduction from me. Where this was necessary I rarely failed to convince a woman of the pure economy of this method of providing fruit for her table, when in this between seasons period fresh fruit is so extremely expensive.

Palatable Tidbits From a Winter Short Course on Retail Merchandising

Some of the Best Things From a Course of Lectures Which the Jobbers and Manufacturers of Sioux City, Iowa, Gave the Retail Trade of That Section.

I went into a store the other day and asked for a certain line of goods and was told they did not handle it, that they never had any call for it. I said, "You have one now. What are you going to do about it. I want those goods right now." He replied, "We do not handle it." I said, "Do you mean to tell me that in this town there is no demand for that line?" He replied, "Absolutely none whatever." I told him that I did not believe him and that I was going to check it up with him; so we stood right there and listened to some of the calls that came in. This was one of the largest stores in a town of about 10,000, and while I stood there six inquiries were made for that line; and I asked him how he expected customers to come back to him time after time to be met with "I don't handle it." I said, "Why don't you handle it? Is it because you do not think there is sufficient demand? Not at all. You have a lot of second-hand junk here that you tried to sell to me and to these other people. You put it on six different times and did not succeed in making a sale. Now then, I would get rid of those goods and put in the things the people really want." He admitted to me that his trade was falling off and he could not understand it. I replied, "That is the reason for it. I came into your store and asked for a certain thing, and you say in a very abrupt, grouchy way, 'We don't handle it.' I know there is a demand for it in this town, and that the people have it. Where do they get it? If you do not handle it someone else will. You had better learn what the demands of your trade really are and what they really want."—By O. A. Klingaman, who spoke on "The Retailer and His Trade."

Sears & Roebuck buy goods and in ten days they must pay for the goods; so from the time Sears & Roebuck get the money from their customers and need to use it they have it about two weeks. One hundred million dollars means $4,000,000 every two weeks, so Sears & Roebuck have all the time $4,000,000 that do not belong to them. Just think if you had plenty of money all the time in your till ready to buy goods, but you have it the other way. Your money is all out, and Sears & Roebuck's is all in. You are working just the opposite from his plan.—By H. O. Roberts, who spoke on "Co-operation vs. Competition."

About three years ago I formed the acquaintance of a certain merchant, and at that time I will venture to say he bought hardly anything except in large quantities. He apparently could afford to do so. He is the largest dealer in his line in the town. To-day that man buys by the dozen where he used to buy by the gross, and he places orders for a half or a quarter of a dozen where he formerly bought by the dozen. What is the result? His stock to-day is about 25 per cent. less than when I first knew him, and last year he did 18 per cent. more business than in the year I formed his acquaintance. What is more to the point—he is making a greater net profit than ever before in his history. This man has a volume of business approaching $500,000. True, he pays more for some of the things, but he is concentrating his purchases with two houses, so this difference is not as great as might be expected. In other words, he is giving these jobbing houses a volume of business which makes worth their while to "talk turkey" to him. He buys some lines in large quantities as ever; but when he does so, it is because he has a large sale so the extra profit is not eaten up by carrying charges. As for other merchant whom I am proud to call my friend is making, I think a larger percentage of profit on the investment than any other man of my acquaintance. If his sales on certain article are not more than twelve or fifteen he buys two. When one is sold he orders another to take its place. On the other hand this man bought two carloads of a certain article to come forward in the month of October. Then he got busy and when the first car arrived, it was already sold, and he cleaned up the second soon after its arrival.—By H. K. Zuppinge who spoke on "Buying."

Chamber of Commerce Will Investigate Nationally Advertised Brands and the Cutting of Prices Thereof. Important Amendment to Be Proposed to National Bankruptcy Act. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

New York, July 9, 1915.

Considerable interest is being taken here in the forthcoming report of the Committee on the Maintenance of Resale Prices of the United States Chamber of Commerce. The finishing touches are now being put upon this, and it is expected that the Board of Directors will receive it during the next few days. The committee will recommend the making of an investigation into the general question of nationally advertised products, particularly that phase of it which concerns the cutting of prices upon such products. The committee will ask the Chamber of Commerce to make the investigation along the following lines:—

1. Cases showing whether there is an essential distinction between goods identified by brand or otherwise and unidentified goods, to the advantage of the former from the consumer's point of view.
2. Cases showing whether advertised or unadvertised goods are more economical for the consumer to purchase at the same price.
3. Cases showing whether or not legislation is desirable to require merchandise to be truthfully advertised and described.

4. Cases showing whether or not such legislation is necessary.

5. Cases showing whether or not competitive conditions prevent the making of exorbitant profits on identified merchandise.

6. Cases showing whether or not competitive conditions prevent the making of exorbitant profits on unidentified merchandise.

7. Cases showing whether or not price cutting actually reduces the value of, and hinders the distribution of, identified goods.

8. Cases showing whether or not price cutting helps or hinders the reduction of distributing costs.

9. Cases showing whether or not price cutting reduces the quality standards of identified articles.

When Congress opens in December, one of the first measures which will be presented for its consideration will be a proposed amendment to the National Bankruptcy Act, which has been prepared by United States Attorney H. Snowden Marshall, of this district. The most important change which it makes in the present law is in the appointment of an official Board of Receivers, or liquidators, who will be named for stated periods at fixed salaries, and whose work will be to take charge of the affairs of insolvent firms and corporations until a settlement or composition is ted, or a discharge obtained. The object is to do away with the appointment of costly receivers, and to reduce the expenses of bankruptcy administration.

The purchases of American refined sugar for European countries all continues. The Federal Commodity sold during the week almost 1,000 tons of granulated sugar to France and Great Britain. The price was 4.70 f. o. b. in bond, which made the total amount involved nearly $1,000,000.

Mr. Eugene Nortz, a well-known expert on coffee, has during the week given out a statement as to the probable Brazil crop for the coming season. He states that his figures are based upon information sent to him by friends in the producing district, and that the indications are for a very large yield. The most conservative estimate is for 11,000,000 bags as against 9,000,000 for the past season. Other estimates run as high as 12,000,000 bags. There are still chances for some curtailment of this, but everything points to a large crop. Mr.

Nortz states that the quality of the current Rio crop will probably be poor owing to the persistent hot weather. The quantity will be about the same as last crop—3,500,000 bags.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea steady with demand for wants only. Prices generally are high, with buying by Russia and England holding up the low grades.—Coffee somewhat firmer, although quiet. The world's visible supply shown to be smaller. Firm news from Brazil. Milds steady and unchanged.—Sugar a little unsettled. Raws no more than steady. Demand for refined weak in feeling.—Canned salmon quiet as buyers are afraid of the market, which is unsettled. Imported sardines growing very scarce on this market. Prices tending upward.—Canned vegetables unchanged for the week.—Spot prunes firm; fair buying. Other dried fruits quiet. Raisins in moderate request.—Wheat nervous and firm. Some export business. Flour in slow movement. Market unsettled. Sales up to date have been shorter than for many years.—Provisions somewhat weaker.

Scoop Time Is With Us All the Time, But This Price Only Happens Once.

A good scoop is a joy and pleasure to handle, and as you must use one all the time, why not take advantage of the generous offer the Howe Scale Co., of 508 Market street, Philadelphia, advertise in this issue. They offer a solid aluminum sugar scoop, a genuine Wagner Cast, size 5 x 12 inches, at $1.10, the regular price being $1.50. This offer lasts but one week and not more than two scoops to one customer.—Advt.

Here's still another delivery scheme that ought to get some of you. The Jones & Noyes people, 235 West Austin avenue, Chicago, have a special commercial bicycle proposition they want to submit to you, if you'll simply send them your name. They have a bicycle—not a motorcycle—that will stand up in the street as if it had four wheels, and will carry a load of 250 pounds. What do you think of that for a bicycle? As a matter of fact, it would take care of all the delivery in some small stores, and would be mighty useful for quick delivery in all kinds of stores. Of course it doesn't cost anything to keep up, and doesn't cost much to buy. Don't let this pass up without looking into it. Read the ad. and then send in the card.

The Ferris people have another of those peculiar ads. of theirs in this week. Are you reading these Ferris ads? Do you know the way they strike me? When you read one of those ads. it's like sitting down and having a talk with a crack-a-jack talker. He doesn't say anything about his business, but you're tickled to death to hear him talk, and when he's through and goes away, you ask who he is. When you find out he sells hams and bacon, even though you never heard of his goods before, you say, "Well, a fellow as clever as that must sell good stuff. I'm going to get next to it." If you'll do that with Ferris & Co. you'll be glad you did. For years they've had a grade of ham and bacon way beyond the ordinary. It was different meat to begin with, and the curing and everything was different. You've certainly heard of Ferris Hams. If you haven't, you should. You take my advice and look them up. For particular trade there's nothing like 'em. JIMMY MANDER.

"There's a Reason" for Grape-Nuts

WITH THE EDITOR

The Dairy and Food Commissioner of Pennsylvania, in his preliminary annual report, agrees with the writer as to the probable uselessness of any cold storage food law while other States are without similar statutes. Mr. Foust speaks as follows about this:—

It has been clear that, in the present lack of entirely certain means of distinguishing cold storage foods from those which have been held without refrigeration for a period of 30 days or more, the keeping track of goods that have been stored in Pennsylvania cold storage warehouses is not sufficient fully to protect the public from the sale of cold storage foods as fresh. It is doubtful whether the situation can be made entirely satisfactory so long as surrounding States lack cold storage legislation and effective governmental control against the abuses which these laws are devised to stop.

Food kept in cold storage for a certain time cannot be told from fresh; even if it could be told, enough chemists could not be provided to make the tests. This allows outside shippers, bound by no law of their own, to ship storage food into Pennsylvania and sell it as fresh. Consumers are deceived, and honest Pennsylvania jobbers and retailers, who mark the cold storage food they sell because they have to, and moreover because it is honest to do so, are compelled to compete with those who sell the same class of products unmarked. The only remedies are 1, for all States to pass a cold storage food law, which will take many years, if it ever happens, and 2, for Congress to pass an interstate commerce cold storage food act. The latter would be quick, easy and completely effective, but there appears to be too many fat-heads in Congress to see it.

An Interesting Letter.

The following letter is interesting:—

Philadelphia, Pa., July 8, 1915.
Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—A great deal is said about the excessive profits which the retailer makes, and I believe that most of it has no foundation. There is some truth in it, however, as I shall testify. I am a wholesale produce salesman and know the wholesale prices of fruits and produce. The other day in passing a retail grocery store in Camden my attention was attracted by some peas which were being displayed for sale in front of a retail store at 15 cents per half peck. I happen to know that this grocer paid 20 cents a basket for those peas, holding five half pecks. He charged 75 cents for what cost him 20 cents. I do not doubt that he could have sold several times as many if he had made only 100 per cent. instead of nearly 200. Is this not a pretty good example of excessive profit?

Yours truly,
R. A. N.

On the surface it certainly seems to be. Yet there may be something to be said. Peas are perishable. When they become a little old they are almost unsalable. Perhaps this grocer was calculating on a large loss for some reason.

Speaking to the general profit proposition, there is always this to be said about excessive retail profits: Those who criticise must not forget that business is conducted so illogically to-day that few articles of merchandise bear their own full burden and nothing more. They either bear less than their full burden, or more in order to make up for the burden other articles should carry but do not. Vegetables usually carry a good retail profit—something must carry it. The very people who protest because they are charged so much for vegetables and other things that now bear the profit would protest just as much if vegetables were reduced and flour and sugar and other lean things were increased.

It is a fine thing to be able to write a good letter. Letter writing is both a science and an art. The man who can write a persuasive, convincing letter can accomplish all sorts of things. Not long ago a general merchant wrote to a trade paper and asked for a form of letter which could be used to announce a bargain sale of shoes. He got this:—

Dear Sir:—You will be interested in the special marked down sale of shoes which I am offering in order to close out some lines which I will no longer carry.

These are all good shoes, and I feel sure you will be able to find something which will fit you and save you considerable money.

Among the stock there are a number of left-over sizes of my very best grades, which I am selling at 25 per cent. to 33 per cent. less than regular prices.

I have placed these shoes all on a separate table, and if you will drop in at my store within the next few days you will get your pick of a very nice assortment.

I guarantee satisfaction on these shoes just the same as I do on my regular stock.

Hoping to see you soon, before the best of the assortment is gone, I am,

Yours very truly,
PARIS PELPHREY.

We cite it to show the type of letter which we believe would never get anywhere. A gentlemanly, mentally neat, mild, inoffensive affair, but with no punch to it at all. If we were a general storekeeper or a grocer in a farming community, we should get a list of out-of-town people who bought or could buy in our town, and we would experiment on them with letters. We should make the letters as distinctive, as unusual and as individual as we could, and we would watch results. When we struck a pace that we found brought results we should cultivate it night and day.

A Montana paper not long ago sent a lot of letters to consumers out there—Montana is a great field for the mail-order houses—asking them why they bought from the catalogue concerns, and what they found in their service which they could not duplicate at the local stores. From something like forty replies, the paper tabulated the following reasons:—

First.—We want something exclusive.

Second.—We will not stand for the discourtesy of clerks in some of the Helena stores. They are indifferent and sneer at a customer with an air of superiority.

Third.—Helena merchants, with the exception of half a dozen enterprising ones, do not do comprehensive advertising, quoting prices and informing women just what they have in their stores.

Fourth.—There is widespread belief that money can be saved by sending to other cities, which flood Helena with attractive advertising.

Fifth.—The women believe there is a price agreement between merchants of Helena, especially among the grocers, and that the Retail Merchants' Exchange is a price-fixing organization. There is not enough competition—the merchants follow each other. If one has a sale, all have them at the same time. If one advertises on a certain day, they all do, and if one stays out, they are all out.

Sixth.—The women believe the merchants extend too much credit, lose large amounts of money on bad accounts, and offer no inducements to the woman who pays cash, but makes her pay for the losses on charge customers.

Seventh.—Because many of the merchants themselves buy outside the city those things they do not carry in stock themselves. This is positively known, as their wives tell it and the transfer companies, the post office, the banks, express companies and other merchants know it beyond a doubt.

Most of these reasons are foolish and offer no good ground whatever for patronizing mail-order houses to the exclusion of local merchants. Suppose every one were removed suppose it were absolutely proved to the consumers of Montana that there was nothing in any of them does anybody think that the people would instantly drop the mail-order houses and buy only of local merchants? They certainly would not for the real reason for buying from mail-order houses would still remain, viz: people like the feeling of buying from a catalogue and from what they are educated to believe is one of the largest houses in the world. The familiar local store has no romance; the mammoth catalogue always has.

AMONG THE TRADE

P. F. Brown & Co., the Philadelphia butter and egg people who failed recently, have offered the creditors a settlement of 30 per cent.—10 per cent. cash in thirty days, 10 per cent. in one year and 10 per cent. in two years. A number of creditors have accepted, but there are quite a few creditors who institute contests over the ownership of certain goods, on the claim that P. F. Brown & Co. got them under circumstances which gave them no right to them. It probably be some time before these are settled. The receiver has been given permission to run the business till July 21st.

Peaches are coming mostly from Georgia, which reports a large crop. Prices range from $1.25 to $2.25 per crate and the quality is fine. A few Jersey peaches are coming in and range from 50 to 75 cents.

If when you figure the profit on a given nationally advertised product you estimate that it costs you seventeen per cent. (your general cost of doing business) to sell it, your calculation is based on unfair premises. It does not cost you seventeen per cent. to sell a nationally advertised product, for three-fourths of the sale is made for you by the advertising. It may not cost you more than five per cent.

It is the things that you have to argue and talk about that cost you seventeen per cent.—or more—to sell.

OUR NEW DEPARTURE IN ADVERTISING*JULY LETTER—To Progressive, Experienced, Well-Principled Grocers*

Our Good Friends:—

One of our City Transportation Lines through the Summer months combines business with practicable philanthropy in a remarkable degree. Fifth Avenue Auto Busses run from Fourth Street at Washington Square to Grant's Tomb, a ride of eight miles along Fifth Avenue to 57th Street, thence Broadway to 72d Street, turning to the Hudson River at Riverside Drive and so on to the finish, along one of the most beautiful River Boulevards in the world. The Busses are double-decked, the roof being fitted to carry 18 to 22 passengers and from this height each traveler has an unobstructed view along the whole course, taking in the busy kaleidoscope of vehicles and foot passengers on the crowded thoroughfare and, on the upper stretch, the beautiful Park setting and the Hudson River.

In the cool of the evening a young man with "His Best Girl" may enjoy this superb round excursion, for forty cents; a worn, weary-headed Shop Girl may now and then have this sixteen miles of diversion and up-building for twenty cents; a millionaire, who still has heart enough and eye enough for the interesting and beautiful in our City life and surroundings, may draw bigger dividends from his two dimes put in the Conductor's Bell-punch Treasury than from any investment he carries in his tin box locked up in the Safe Deposit Vault. Up to midnight on these lovely Summer evenings crowded Busses give joy to happy hearted travelers.

To one interested in the complexities of City Life, a Buss roof offers fine vantage ground to study one of the practical problems of Police Management in the control of the masses of vehicles and foot travelers bound in different directions at every congested Street Crossing. Great progress has been made in this special line in the last five years. One or two well trained, quick witted Policemen at our more busy crossings now keep the crowd of humanity and machinery moving with neatness and despatch. Put yourself where you can look down on one of these cross-roads and let your brains and eyes work at their best. Big lumbering Busses take their cue from the beck of that white gloved hand—the Boy on his Bicycle, the costliest Limousine, the Dago's Push Cart loaded down with fruit, the high piled Express Truck, the light Trotting Wagon following the dainty specimen of horse flesh, each has its chance without fear or favor. Now at the beck of Traffic Officer Richard Kreutzer, No. 5020, stationed by the Waldorf Astoria, Fifth Avenue at 34th Street, popularly and affectionately known as "Big Dick," the East and West bound calvacade stop in their tracks while North and South have the right of way. "Big Dick" puts his hand on the shoulder of the Boy and the Bike starts off under his friendly push, "Now away with you, young man! Do your best!" and the lad does, saying to himself "Gee! But don't I wish that Peeler was my Uncle!" That smooth-shod frisky mare begins to dance as the procession moves. She is nervous for her feet slip, but a strong hand at her bridle and a friendly pat on her arched neck brings confidence. She understands just what he means when he says "Now Lady, pull true!" And off she goes. Oh see! That Huckster with the rattle-bones of a nag wags his tail to skin in out of his turn. But the white glove stops him, "Now Piggy, if you try that again at this crossing, you know what you will get?" So she goes. That bright woman in a white shirt-waist, bound down town in a perky Buick to bring home her husband after the business day's work. She cordially recognizes the Crossing Guardian and he salutes her with dignity and courtesy as if she were the Mayor's wife. Now all the Avenue traffic stops at that gesture while from the sidewalk a little midget in white from neck to toe, bare-headed, with pink ribbons holding up her curls, catches the friendly nod of her Policeman, darts across the Street like a fairy, turns at the curb to wave her thanks to her Guardian No. 5020. The dainty little maid smiles, the grim Peeler smiles, every mother's son and daughter smiles, for "One touch of nature makes the whole earth kin." But following the little maid from each side a river of humanity surges across the Avenue. Did you ever try to calculate or count how many people could go over each way in six seconds where every one keeps in his line and moves straight ahead quickly?

By this time does it not percolate through our gray matter that the Traffic Policeman is a good deal of a man and has a considerable mission in life,—for under his eye the strong do not crush the Weak, the Swift do not over-ride the Slow, the Hogs never crowd out the Fair. Each man in has his right of way; a fair show for every man, and so the welfare of all is promoted. From our Buss top has not our ten cent ride among many interesting scenes given us the chance to appreciate a bit of splendid Government in the way of securing the rights, the safety, the happiness of all?

The United States has been visited during the last quarter by two remarkable Delegations. The first, by invitation of our Government issued more a year ago, brought Three Delegates from each of 20 Latin-American Republics in Central and South America; (only Mexico and Hayti were not presented.) Those Delegates were the Guests of the Government from the hour they landed on our Shores and went from important City to City, where they were shown the most interesting features of our American Development and everywhere treated with the most generous courtesy. Then they rallied in Washington where 120 Appointees from various vocations met them and were in conference for a week. The President of the United States gave them an Address of Welcome and the Secretary of the Treasury was the permanent Presiding Officer. With many Committees the week was busily occupied considering the questions of general Finance, Commerce, Transportation and Commercial Law, all with the hope of developing to the utmost friendly business relations between the American Republics, under a Watchword "AMERICA for AMERICANS!"

Before this Foreign Delegation left our Shores there arrived a second company of 16 leading Merchants from the Orient, appointed by the President of the Republic of China, who came to see what advanced methods of the United States had to show to their blossoming Republic. Everywhere they were received with the greatest cordiality and friendliness and given opportunity not only to see but to express to us the result of their own experience. These 16 men of the Orient were invited to attend a Regular Meeting of the New York Chamber of Commerce and afterwards to Lunch in this magnificent Commercial Palace. The ordinary docket of business was swiftly followed and then they were welcomed by the Vice-President of the Chamber and was responded to by His Excellency, the Chinese Minister and by the Chairman of the Delegation, Mr. Cheng Hsun Chang, who spoke in his native tongue. But immediately afterwards the Honorable Secretary of the Committee, David Z. T. Yui, gave in excellent English and with much force, a translation of what the Chairman had said. Two things were notable in this brief Address. The Chairman said "The people of China believe thoroughly in the Open Door Policy. They are willing to give the Open Door to all Peoples' Industries and Commerce in their Republic, and they would like to find a door as widely and generously opened with the American People. Then occurred this remarkable phrase, "Furthermore, we are trying to pursue another policy which is even better than the Open Door Policy and that is the Open Heart Policy."

This met with applause as he went on to say "We mean that we want to have our hearts open to you in business, in developing Industries and Commerce and the establishment of intimate and cordial friendship between your great Country and ours, and this Open Heart Policy cannot be blocked or hindered, but there will always be a thorough passage way through which friendly feeling and cordial relations will flow from your Country to our Country and from our People to your People." "We shall then not only see tremendous possibilities for Commerce but also tremendous opportunities for the two greatest Republics of the world to join hands for Liberty, Equity and Universal Peace." (Great applause!)

Now what can be said of such business ideals as these from those who have been called "The Heathen Chinese?" As a result of the tour, the Commission has announced the preliminary organization of a Chinese-American Banking concern, with a capital of $5,000,000, the planning of a Chinese-American Steamship Line, with a Gulf of Mexico or Atlantic terminal, and the placing of orders by Chinese Merchants for American goods to the amount of $5,000,000.

What if our Great Captains of Industry were to practice the Open Door and Heart Policy in their business,—for this is simply what No. 5020 cures at a Street Crossing. What would the Commercial Princes, Swift, Armour, Sulzberger, Cudahy, etc., say to that? Would Heaven dawn for them and all other business men in this line?

But while waiting for these Magnates to "hit the trail" we smaller men can try it on and be all the manlier and more prosperous for it. By the way, why not let us supply your patrons with "That Irresistible Flavor" the Ferris Trade Mark Hams and Boneless Breakfast Bacon. Every Joint and Flitch bearing the Ferris Brand is of our own Curing on our Mott Street Premises. Prices Printed and Invariable. How does that strike you for a self-respecting business habit? Safe and pleasant for you to tie to?

With all good wishes.

In sincerity your friends,

Prospective Store Buyer Wants Information.

Conneaut, Ohio, July 1, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I expect to buy a grocery store soon and would appreciate any information you could give me concerning same. Enclosed find stamped envelope for reply.

Could you tell me where I could purchase a good book on the grocery business?

The store I have in view has a Keith account system. It is one of the old style files and will hold 150 sales books. I do not feel able to buy a new system at present and would be grateful if you could give me any information on the book-keeping system to use or where I could get same. Will also have a check throwing four-drawer Dayton cash register. I have worked in a grocery for two years but do not know much of the accounting system.

Thanking you in advance, I am,
Yours truly,
WM. E. BARBER.

If you will give us an idea what kind of information you want we will be glad to give it to you if we can.

If by a book on the grocery business you mean a cyclopedia, the most elaborate work of this kind is "The Grocers' Cyclopædia," published by Artemus Ward, 50 Union Square, New York, and costing $10.

The best short and complete bookkeeping system is the McCaskey system, made by the McCaskey Register Co., Alliance, O. That is a complete bookkeeping and accounting system, and can be operated by everybody without experience. It entirely takes the place of the old-fashioned bookkeeping system.

Dr. Shepard, American Tea Pioneer, is Dead.

Dr. Charles Upham Shepard, who was known as the "Father of the Tea Industry" in America because of his success in growing tea on a large scale in this country for the commercial market, died during the week at his home, Pinehurst Tea Farm, Summer-ville, S. C. Doctor Shepard in 1890 began his experiments in the cultivation and manufacture of tea at his Pinehurst plantation, succeeding where Government and other American tea pioneers had failed. His plantation in South Carolina covered about 60 acres, raised about 15,000 pounds of tea annually. His farm has been visited by many botanists and was a source of interest to officials of the Government, especially of the Department of Agriculture, who hoped that others would profit by the successful experiment of Doctor Shepard in showing that tea can be successfully grown in this country.

Thinks Eggs Ought Not to Be Sold Wholesale at Uniform Price or "Loss Off"

Agriculture Department Argues They Ought to Be Sold from the Beginning at Various Prices According to Grade. Mentions About the Enormous Egg Breakage.

Washington, D. C., July 9, 1915.

The United States Department of Agriculture has issued a pamphlet through which it hopes to change the prevailing method of selling eggs from producer to jobber. This includes the country general storekeeper who trades in eggs. The Department thinks eggs should be sold at different prices based on their quality—so much for fancy eggs and so much for other grades, rather than sold at a lump average, or loss off, as now.

The Department's argument is as follows:—

Under the plan of selling according to quality, the farmer quickly finds that he makes more money by selling his eggs according to quality than when he simply sells them at an average price per dozen which the buyer has to make low in order to cover himself against off-size, off-color, dirty, cracked, checked or deteriorating eggs. If the farmer has one dozen of 17-cent eggs and another dozen of 13-cent eggs, he gets 30 cents for his two dozen, whereas under the other basis he probably would get only 13 cents a dozen, or 26 cents for his basket. In the absence of a quality basis of buying the buyer either simply pays a lump sum, gambling on the quality of the eggs, and naturally fixing a very low price, or buys on a "loss off" basis, which means that he deducts from the farmer's returns all the bad, leaking or unmarketable eggs found in his offering.

The quality basis of buying is generally believed by students of the business to lie at the very foundation of supplying the large centers steadily with eggs of good quality.

Quality buying is equally important to the local storekeeper and small-town egg collector. This was illustrated accidentally one day at the car when two of the three principals in an egg deal met in the candling room. One of these, a dealer who bought on the case-count plan—that is, paid a flat price per dozen for the eggs, whatever their condition—bought a lot of 10 dozen eggs and asked that their quality be determined by candling. He had paid 13 cents a dozen for the eggs, and the candle showed that only eight dozen could be rated either as "firsts" or "seconds." The remaining two dozen were so bad as not to be marketable under any grade. A quality buyer who was one of the group said, "These look to me like the same lot of eggs that were brought to my place this morning. I offered 15 cents for firsts and 12 cents for seconds, but the woman who brought them would not sell at this price, and said she could find an egg man who would take them all." The case-count buyer figured gloomily that he had paid about 16 cents a dozen for a mixture of "firsts" and "seconds," or 1 cent above the market price for "firsts." In another case it was found that a case-count buyer had bought the eggs that had been thrown out by a quality buyer. This practice, however, in many towns is being broken up by agreement among the merchants, who stamp rejected eggs and thus prevent their resale as "farm run" eggs.

Not long ago the Department issued some startling figures showing how the enormous breakage of eggs in transit raised the market prices of eggs. The extent of the breakage is further revealed by the following additional statement, issued by the Department:—

According to this investigation of an average of 24 eggs out of every 30 dozen packed in a case arriving at market either cracked, dented, leaky or mashed. These figures represent the detailed examination of 6,000 dozen eggs before and after shipment, and the result of a general study of the condition of 71 carloads of over 500,000 dozen eggs shipped in carlots from packing houses in the corn belt to 10 different markets on the Atlantic coast. They mean that New York City alone has a breakage of at least 116,000,000 eggs annually. The study was also extended to the question of whether the egg breakage was due principally to the jarring received in railroad cars or to carelessness on the part of the packers. Over 200 cases, or 6,000 dozen eggs were separately examined at the packing house and the place of each egg in the case charted. As a result of this examination it was found that over 5 eggs to the case, or 5.34 per cent, were broken or had cracked shells before the eggs were loaded in the car. Between the casing of the eggs in the packing house and the delivery to the city merchant there was an additional breakage of over 5 eggs per case.

The number of eggs broken in transit, it is believed, could be greatly reduced if only sound, new cases were used, proper packing employed, a proper system of nailing on the covers followed, and an efficient method of stowing and bracing the cases in the car practiced. A study of egg cases has established exact facts as to the soundness of the wood, and has shown that there is a right and wrong way to drive every nail employed in putting the case together.

By sending out thousands of dozens of eggs packed in mas and stowed in different ways and then recording the condition of the eggs on their arrival for a long journey, the specialists determined that a cemented nail will hold better in an case than a smooth nail; that use of less than six nails in the case greatly increases chance of straining; and that s driven in straight make the much more rigid than nails less driven at an angle. The experiment has also shown the most effective place to drive each nail. One of the most disastrous things that can happen to an egg case, is for it to actually come apart, for the right angles at the corners to spring, with the result that the case loses its rigidity and the eggs are broken. The straight nail is to prevent this far better than a nail carelessly driven, which is in at an angle and does not grip the wood. The way in which the eggs are packed inside the crate is also very important. Many experiments have shown that the fillers, or little cardboard cells in which the eggs are put, must be new and strong and that the flats, or cardboard sheets placed at the bottom and top of each case and in between the layers of eggs must be springy and unbroken. There is, of course, a temptation to reuse these fillers and flats. In the case of the fillers, the little projections around the outside which keep the nearest line of eggs from coming into contact with the box, are very important and in second-hand fillers these are apt to be bent, with the result that the eggs are not kept in place, but shift about with the movement of the filler. Some of the fillers when once used are dampened and weakened by "leakers," with the result that each layer of little partitions, instead of being rigid and keeping the eggs in place, has weak points which permit individual eggs to mash against each other. Much of the breakage in transit is due, not to unusually rough handling by the railroads, but to neglect of these simple facts.

our Chance.—You sometimes hear some one say, "I never had the same chance as So and So." That's a weak excuse of self-excuse and you should never be guilty of giving it a thought, much less an expression.

For this reason your chance never changes when you make yourself ready. National preparedness is a preventive of war, individual preparedness is a preventive from standstill.

But," I hear some of you say, "how can I begin this preparedness you talk about." You have begun it this minute if you are really interested in the printed pages of this paper. Apart from daily practical study of your work and your goods there is no educational medium to be compared with your trade paper. A young man cannot hope to become properly versed in the food line without looking forward to the help furnished by the thoughts of bright men and the doings of big people as recorded in your grocery paper.

Personally the writer would consider himself out of touch and out of tune with grocerydom were it not for the splendid privilege of reading the editorials, "The New York Letter," "Organization News," etc., contained in the Grocery World and Modern Merchant and the "American Grocer."

Such reading fits you for your chance." It's our text book, and you know, without a text book a freshman is a poor chance of becoming a sophomore. A friend who is a stickler for knowledge of goods was asked by one of his clerks, "Why is it that the weight of the contents of packages is always marked on the packages now-a-days?"

You see, that man is a stand-stiller. Perfectly evident that he hasn't even common knowledge of the laws governing the very goods he is handling daily. It isn't therefore only a duty to read your trade paper, it is a necessity.

Men are not called to good jobs who have spent their spare time in a pool room or in front of a bar.

President Wilson didn't appoint a professional municipal politician to succeed Mr. Bryan.

Yes, sir, your chance is just as good as the other fellow's, because it's all in your own hands—or head.

If you are in the grocery business for keeps, make the most of it. It's a never ending study. Yet it is like being efficient in anything—efficiency brings its own reward.

It's a very good thing to read up corporation laws, and thereby know the meaning of the various terms.

This thought is suggested by a remark, or rather a question, asked the other day by one whom we considered pretty intelligent and a first-class salesman. His question was, "What do they mean by preferred stock?" You would naturally think the very word was self-explanatory—that in the division of assets the preferred stockholders commanded a prior right to those holding common stock.

Anyway, the more you try to learn about business the more you'll want to learn, and the greater your "chance" will be.

BURK'S Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

No change has occurred in the tea market during the week. There's a good demand for medium grades, mostly new teas, which are selling actively on a fair basis. Low grades are as they have been for several months—very scarce and very high.

Coffee.

Various causes have combined to make coffee a small fraction higher this week than a week ago, speaking now of Rio and Santos. The announcement of the figures on the world's visible supply showed considerable falling off, which had much to do with the firmer feeling. Europe is also buying and that helps. The situation in Brazil appears to be fairly steady. Mild coffees are unchanged for the week but firm. Europe is buying considerable quantities. Mocha can be bought to come forward for around 23 cents green, and in a large way, but there is no definite information as to when they will arrive. Mocha coffee on spot is about 3 cents higher than that.

Sugar.

The sugar market, although steady to firm, shows no change for the week. The cause of the firmness is European purchases, which bid fair to become large in the not distant future. Both raw and refined remained unchanged for the week. The consumptive demand for refined sugar is fair, although not so active as some operators believe it should be, in view of the large quantity of cheap fruit.

Syrup and Molasses.

There is no change in this market for the week. Glucose is unchanged. Compound syrup is dull and unchanged, and so is sugar syrup. The demand for consumption is quite late in both cases. Some grades of molasses are becoming scarce and firmer. There is a very heavy demand for blackstrap for manufacturing purposes.

Fish.

Mackerel is very firm but unchanged for the week. The supply of good Norway mackerel on spot is light and holders are asking full prices, and getting them. There is a little mackerel on the other side available for this country, and what there are are said to be in strong hands. New Norway mackerel will not be available for a month or six weeks, and the supply is expected to be light owing to the war. Shore mackerel have not yet become a factor, but some new ones are being offered at from $12 to $14 per barrel. Irish mackerel are no factor at all, as the supply is light. Cod, hake and haddock are dull and unchanged. Salmon on spot is still in buyer's favor, with comparatively light demand. Prices on new Columbia River salmon have been named on about the same basis as last year. Domestic sardines are cheap and sales have been made as low as $2.25 for quarter oils in a large way, f. o. b. Packers claim that these goods are costing about 25 cents more than the selling price to pack. Imported sardines show no change.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged and quiet. The outlook for the coming crop is for a late season, probably accompanied by a glut. The market for newly packed peas is becoming very much demoralized, and standards have sold in a large way as low as 50 cents per dozen. This is believed to be 10 cents below the average cost of packing. Other grades of peas and corn are unchanged and quiet. Apples dull at ruling quotations. California canned goods, both spot and future, are weak on account of a present and prospective over-supply. Small Eastern staple canned goods are proceeding through the packing season without incident.

Butter.

The butter market is unchanged, with a normal consumptive demand, and a slight increase in the production, due to the very favorable weather. The quality of the butter arriving now averages fancy and the market is firm and healthy.

Eggs.

The egg market is steady at a decline of about one cent, due to the fact that the quality is not averaging so well as it has been. The receipts of eggs continue liberal and the market is steady at the decline with no immediate change in sight.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged with a considerable percentage of the receipts going into cold storage. The weather has been very favorable for the making of fine cheese and the quality of the present production averages very fancy. As long as the weather continues as good as it has been the market will probably remain about stationary.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady and unchanged with a fair consumptive demand. Pure lard is steady at a decline of ¼ cent and a moderate consumptive demand. Compound lard shows no change and fair demand. Compound lard appears to be in a fairly steady and settled condition. Dried beef, barreled pork and canned meats are all

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are a shade weaker for the week, probably to 10 cents. Marrows are steady firm at unchanged prices and fair demand. California limas weaker and to come forward in beans can be obtained in a large way at 4.85. On spot the market is about ½ cent above that. Green and Scotch peas are unchanged and quiet.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes on spot are steady to firm but unchanged for the week; demand fair. Futures are no weaker and perhaps are a trifle firmer, though it is difficult to understand how the prune situation can be maintained much longer on the present basis. The coming crop is expected to be as high as 20,000,000 pounds, whereas the Orange and Lemon Display.

Cover the bottom of the window with green crepe paper and also the sides of the window, and finish with a twisted strip of the same. Make a sign card in the rear like illustration. Next take two tall boxes, about 18 inches high, cover with green crepe paper and place in the rear at each side. Now cut strips about two inches wide and tack fast to the three edges of each box and slant down to the floor. On the top of the boxes place a glass of lemonade and orangeade and a straw, with a slice of fruit on the rim of the glass. Now make two large semi-circles of the fruit on the front of the boxes. Make two placards with the price of each fruit at the front of the boxes. Make two placards with the price of each as you are selling them, and in the center of the front of the window make a pyramid of loaf sugar.

Trouble in the Rennet Bottle

Unless a man knows how to make Rennet, every bottle he puts out stores up a world of trouble for the retail grocer.

Nothing is more delicate than Rennet, nothing harder to make to keep.

James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet, begin with, is as clean as we could want Rennet to be. It is so clean that we guarantee it against spoilage. And it is probably the cheapest Rennet made — it will curdulate milk in five minutes.

Surely a grocer should be willing to handle such a superfine article for a small profit — but Shinn's Rennet pays 100%.

Why stand ye here idle when you could be selling this great good thing?

mestic consumption of prunes is not over 60,000,000. Europe has always been depended on to consume the bulk of the balance, but this year Germany, the largest buyer, is a very uncertain quantity. If large orders do not come from Germany, it appears as if the American market would come pretty near going to pieces. Peaches, apricots, raisins, currants and other dried fruits are all unchanged and dull.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Rice.

Trade during the past week has been quiet, a natural incident to the July 4th holiday. Stocks in dealers' and grocers' hands are steadily working down and there is every indication that we shall go into new crop with little or no carry over. Fancy Japan sorts are in greater demand, with practically no supply, and a better toned market is anticipated for all grades. Screenings and second heads are also in short supply.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast indicate no change for the better. Merchants evidently are endeavoring to reduce stocks to the lowest possible minimum prior to stock taking. However, a better feeling seems to be manifest, due to improving conditions in the cotton and tobacco crops. Prices seem to be holding firm.

At New Orleans the trade are giving Honduras sufficient attention to take up the bulk of supplies in first hands. Japans, Blue Rose and broken rices continue scarce and in good demand, although the trade seem to be buying rather conservatively. New crop, according to consensus of opinion, will arrive in milling quantities about two weeks later than usual.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, reports indicate occasional sales at firm prices. There has been a few sales of rough at full prices. Weather conditions, in the aggregate, continue favorable and it is anticipated that approximate crop percentages of Honduras, Japans and Blue Rose will be available within the next two or three weeks.

Standard Canned Goods.

The recent weekly bulletins of the leading mercantile agencies and the market letters issued by the banks and other financial concerns show a distinct trend towards an improvement in the merchandise markets which is expected to broaden, both as to demand and prices, as the fall trade opens up. Big orders for canned goods in this market during June were not so numerous as they usually are during that month in normal times, but in point of numbers the buying orders exceeded those in the June previous, at least that was our experience. A very encouraging feature in this market is the wide scattering of the goods to the same markets that have steadily drawn on our canners since the first of the year. The new crops of peas, spinach, string beans, cherries and berries are now in the cans, and the other articles will be taken care of as they arrive.

Holders of tomatoes in this section appear to feel rather encouraged by the increased buying. Previous to June the larger part of the demand was for the No. 2 size tins, but during June the No. 3 size became active again, and the quantity of them held in the warehouses here was much reduced. The news about the coming crop and the size of the acreage this season as compared with last year, is much mixed. The unusually late spring and the continued cool, wet weather up to this week have upset the calculations of the growers and canners, but the crop is in no danger at present. The same character of buying of future tomatoes prevails, though it is a trifle larger without any ginger or pep to it.

Building Up Store Character

Every product of the National Biscuit Company suggests goodness, freshness, cleanliness — quality. N. B. C. goods as a line suggest to customers, present and prospective, the character of the store that sells them.

These products are widely and persistently advertised. People have confidence in them because they have been proved good. Consequently, for the grocer who sells them, National Biscuit Company products are goodwill promoters—they bring trade and they hold trade.

There was an increase in the orders for string beans and wax beans, because of the very low prices at which they can be bought. A casual glance at your records will show that the opportunity to buy No. 2 wax beans at 42½ cents per dozen and No. 2 green string beans at 42½ cents per dozen, f. o. b. Baltimore, have been the exceptions, not the rule. There is a better demand for spot sweet potatoes, with a strong upward tendency as to prices, and future sweet potatoes are finding more buyers, too. For the other lines of vegetables during the week there was the usual run of daily orders, small to medium size, without any interesting developments in any of them, though spot corn shows some strength every now and then.

The new pack of strawberries, both the water and syruped berries, has sold faster than the canners expected. Cherries are active in small orders, no big business doing in them as yet. If they prove to be a small pack the market will do better. Raspberries and blackberries were not so active as in the week previous, but they look firmer ahead. Spot pears and apples are not at all plentiful, and the prices are strong. Next to nothing doing this week in spot or future peaches. Pie grated pineapples are fairly active; the other grades are very quiet. Gooseberries and blueberries are selling in small quantities.

Cove oysters are quiet, though firm as to prices.

Spices.

The market is at a standstill. There has been little buying during the past week, due to the holiday. Prices on spices generally are slightly easier, but higher ones are predicted.

Pepper.—Generally unchanged, and present prices are considered very favorable, as stocks are getting very low.

Cloves are being closed out by holders who are anxious to sell at low prices. In fact, prices are lower than any shipments on the way. A purchase at present would be a good one.

Pimento (Allspice).—Very dull. Prices are exceedingly low and at a standstill.

Mace.—In fair demand. Prices are unchanged and there are no prospects of any change in the near future, though it is predicted that supplies will not serve the wants for the next few months.

Nutmegs.—Prices are slightly easier, notwithstanding the fact that stocks in this country are very limited. They are in fair demand. Prices on this article will prove interesting before long.

Cassias.—Cables from abroad are very high, though prices in this country have not been affected as yet. A short crop is strongly indicated, and we believe higher prices will rule a little later on.

Ginger.—There has been a little trading on this article in closing out odds and ends at very cheap prices. African ginger has not as yet arrived and this article at present is sold at a good profit.

Green Ginger Root.—There has been few arrivals and they have been taken up as fast as they came in. In fact, arrivals are not sufficient for the demand. It is predicted higher prices will rule over the summer months.

Paprikas.—Prices are unchanged, with moderate jobbing demand.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—The market is fairly active and shows more strength than the spice market. Caraway, poppy and celery seeds are very firm. All seeds are likely to advance, due to low stocks in this country. The Malta crop of cummin seed is exceedingly poor.

McCORMICK & Co.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The herring market is very quiet for the simple reason that there is practically no desirable stuff to be had in the market to-day. The demand is good, and as soon as new supplies of new fine Scotch and Holland herrings come in, the trade will take them, even at high prices.

Mackerel quiet, but firm. Holders are not pressing for sales.

Sardines of all kinds continue in good demand, but unfortunately, stocks of all kinds—French, Portuguese and Norway are very small, and new supplies are lacking. The demand is really good, but buyers do not seem to have grasped the idea as yet, that they are obliged to pay higher prices if they want these goods. We importers have to pay more money for every shipment that we are getting, and naturally, we have to get more money for the goods if we want to make a profit. There has been a very good catch of sardines in Norway of those new, summer fish. They are real good in quality, but the great trouble is that they have such a very large demand from all over that the packers really do not know whether to sell or not, as they all seem to be speculatively inclined, and want to hold for higher prices, but whether they will realize or not, of course is a question. At any rate, it makes it impossible for us to secure large supplies at reasonable figures at the present time. We simply have to wait what the outcome will be.

The catch of codfish is practically over, and it shows a large shortage against last season, and there is no question in our minds but that prices will be rather high for stockfish this coming season, as well as for codfish; that is for the imported Norwegian codfish.

MARKET NOTES.

Tomatoes are coming in from New Jersey and ranging from $1 to $1.50. Everything looks like a very large crop of tomatoes everywhere, accompanied by low prices. Mississippi tomatoes are also coming North now and average 40 cents.

Jersey corn is in and brings 75 cents per basket. The quality is fair and the crop promises big. Sugar corn will be along in about two weeks. New Orleans is shipping some corn north in barrels, at $3 per barrel (150 ears), but the quality is nothing extra.

Watermelons from Georgia and Florida are cheap—25 to 40 cents each, and the quality is fine. Demand excellent.

Currants are coming in from New York State and New Jersey and are cheaper almost than ever before—7 cents.

Jobbers' Packages Now empt From Pennsylvania Net Weight Act.

Amendment to Commodities Signed by Governor Providing the Act Shall Not Apply to Packages and Containers Such as Cans and Boxes.

The Governor of Pennsylvania has signed an amendment to commodities act of 1913, which body seemed to know anything about until it was passed. The commodities act provides that goods in package form should be a statement of the net weight, measure or numerical count of the contents. When the act was passed in 1913 there was considerable uncertainty as to just what was meant "in package form," and whether instance it meant a case of canned goods or of flavoring extracts sold by a jobber. The general opinion was that such containers as a case or a box were not packages and therefore did not need to be marked with the weight, measure or count. The Weights and Measures Department agreed with this view, and never made any effort to enforce the act against jobbers' packages.

The amendment which is now law, however, provides that "the act shall not apply to the marking of the net quantity of the contents on containers or packages named, sold or offered for sale by wholesalers, jobbers or commission merchants."

Give Us More Little Jenny Clerks.

Say, it's a funny game, ain't it—this salesmanship business. By gravy, it's almost as individual as red hair, if you know what I mean. Some people come into the world with it and those that don't will never get it.

I saw the thing tried out last fall by my own house. One of our regular road men was sick and couldn't go out over a certain territory in north Jersey. So they sent a young fellow that had been shipping clerk but had a hunch to go on the road. He was gone three weeks and got a thousand dollars' worth of business. That was nothing for that territory. Then they put another man on it and he went over it again, when it ought to have been squeezed dry. He got five thousand.

D'ye get it? I'll bet a nickel that the first man worked a darned sight harder than the second. He saw the same people, put up the same goods, shot the same arguments, and he knew the trade just as well. I think I said that neither of 'em knew the trade at all.

What's the answer? Why, one of 'em could sell goods and the other couldn't. Of course the first man hadn't had as much experience as the other, but he had had enough to show up better than he did—if there was anything in him.

Same way in a retail store. You fellows have seen the difference. One of your clerks gives people what they ask for and another sells 'em that and something else. It would pay you to pay the second clerk twice as much as you pay the first. Twice as much? Ten times, I was going to say.

One day last week my wife got me down in the street, tied my hands and feet and carried me in a candy store with her. Laying me in the corner she went up to the counter.

"What have you got that's good?" she asked the clerk. "I want something and I don't know what. I'm tired of all the usual things."

The clerk didn't care a darn whether she was tired of 'em or not—she said so with her face. She looked over at the show case and acted vacant.

"There's maple fudge, that's nice," she said.

Nothing doing. We had already ate ourselves sick on maple fudge.

"We have Italian creams, they're very nice," she said then.

They didn't look so, so we passed them up.

"Have you tried marshmallow crullers; they're real nice," said the clerk. "They're something new."

Neither of us watered up over marshmallow crullers, and to make a long story short, we ended up with half a pound of orange paste, that I gave up 15 cents for. It gave us both a tummy-ache and never again.

What d'ye think of that, anyway? We went into that store and said "Here, we want to buy something and we don't know what. You tell us what." And the fatheaded clerk said "this is nice," and "that is nice," and "this is real nice," and in the end we spent 15 cents for something we didn't want. And it turned our little tummies inside out and hurt the candy business.

Wouldn't it peeve you to have a clerk like that? Honest, I'd rather pay such a gimp to stay away from the store. She hurts trade.

On the way home we passed another store that we get into every once in a while.

"I wish we'd gone in there," said my wife. "That little Jenny would have had something we wanted. Let's go in now."

"Nope," I said, "I've had enough. That cotton-headed mutt down at Engle's got my nerves. We'll let our half pound of orange paste hold us for to-night."

"That little Jenny" that my wife talked about—she's the clerk for you. Honest to goodness, she can separate you from more money in five minutes than the other clerk could in all her life. If we'd gone in that store and said to Jenny what we said at the other place—"I want something and I don't know what," Jenny would have known what all right. She'd have opened the boxes and the show cases and shoved samples in our faces until we died happy.

But before we died, Jenny would have taken from us all the money we had except carfare.

Why I've refused to go in that store more than once because I had to pay the rent next day and had the money with me. Maybe that's drawn a little steep, but it's a fact that I've said to my wife many a time, "Not on your life. I ain't going in there and let that Jenny hypnotize me."

I don't mean she makes a nuisance of herself—nothing like it. But she's such a bully good salesman that she gets it over and you're loaded up before you're next.

Funny thing—these people that haven't got the knack; they can't get it. I've seen 'em try. The born salesman, he can keep after you and after you, and somehow you don't get mad. He may not land you, but you stay his friend. Pretty often, though, he'll land you.

The other kind, let him keep at you half as long and you'll feel like poking him one.

Take that girl that told us how nice things were. I'll bet if I took her and let her watch the way little Jenny did it, and had her say the same things—the same identical words—she wouldn't make good. It wouldn't work. There would be something that wouldn't be there—the salt would be missing or the sugar. It wouldn't go, that's all.

I know a little bit about the store where Jenny works—how much business it does, and all—and I like to bet anybody that she brings in enough profit to pay more than her wages. I don't mean profit on the trade that come in and she works on. I mean trade that she makes that wouldn't be done if she didn't do it.

What a cinch to do business with two or three live wires like that. The trouble is you can't hold 'em. A clerk like that ups and opens place of his own. But I'll tell you this—if I had a store I'd be on the dead hunt night and day to find 'em to hold as long as I could. No trying to train the other kind. You may be able to make 'em a little better, but you can't give 'em the selling stunt any more than you can give 'em a body six inches taller than the Lord made it.

319.—Paying Commissions on Cancelled Orders.

The following letter, received from an Indianapolis, Ind., reader, raises an interesting point regarding the payment of salesmen. Of course the law is the same whether it be a salesman on the road, or a retail salesman who goes among customers to get orders, or a clerk behind the counter who gets a commission on what he sells:—

We are having an argument with one of our salesmen which may require us to change our whole method of doing business, but before going to such length we feel like submitting the question to you. We employ several outside men, who are paid by receiving a share of the profits on their orders. There has been more or less friction between us over whether anything was due them on orders which were cancelled, but the matter has never reached a head until the present time. One of the salesmen now demands to receive regular commission on all orders he sends in which we accept, whether they are afterward cancelled or not. He states that he has been told by a lawyer that he can collect those from us. You can see that it would not be good business for us to pay a salesman for obtaining orders which we do not fill, and we could not afford to do that and would not. We are desirous of avoiding all controversy with our salesmen, however, and hope you can throw some light on the matter.

This is another complication arising from the loose and indiscriminate habit of cancelling orders, which obtains more or less all over the United States. I can tell this correspondent how he can solve his difficulty with his salesman, but he will probably not adopt it, because he will not consider it good business to do so. All he needs to do is to refuse to accept cancellations of orders. If he will do that, and will stand by it, all the orders his salesmen get, which are accepted, will be filled, and the salesmen will of course get their pay.

But he will probably not do that, so let us see what his status is under the present method.

As I have explained, all courts would probably read into every ordinary contract of purchase to-day, the custom allowing cancellation at will. That is, if a seller who had previously allowed indiscriminate cancellation, suddenly refused to accept cancellation of a given order, without warning, the court would say: "Mr. Seller, you can't do that. All your previous relations with your buyer allowed cancellations, and you must therefore change those relations by notice that henceforth you will not allow cancellation. Until you do that you cannot strictly hold him to his orders."

Moreover, the courts would also hold a salesman charged with notice of this custom. A salesman who does business right in the midst of the cancelling custom, who sees his own customers cancelling orders time after time and getting away with it, of course knows that any order he gets may not be filled. My judgment is that he could not collect commissions on cancelled orders, for his employer is entitled to expect—unless the salesman tells him different—that he is going along with the cancelling custom like everybody else, and that he will for himself treat as actual orders, only such as the buyer stands by.

Therefore where employer, salesman and buyer have been going along under the prevailing custom, the employer could not hold his customer to an order without first warning him, nor could the salesman hold his employer for commissions on cancelled orders without first warning him.

Particularly is this the case with a salesman who has never heretofore claimed commissions on cancelled orders, or who if he has claimed them has not enforced his claim.

But if a salesman warned his employer that hereafter he would not be a party to any cancelling of orders, that the orders he obtained were obtained in good faith, that the employer could enforce them if he would, and that if he chose not to do so, the salesman would still expect commissions, then I believe the salesman could collect every cent. The employer could no longer plead custom of the trade, for the salesman had notified him that he would no longer be bound by custom of the trade.

The only thing for an employer to do in such a case would be one of three: 1—take the same attitude with his customers and refuse cancellations; 2—pay commissions whether orders are filled or not; 3—discharge the salesman.

I think I should say that if there were no custom of the trade to change it, a salesman's commissions would be due and payable the minute he had obtained an order and his employer had accepted it. He would not even need to wait until it was filled.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed you will please find circular that we used the first part of January, 1915, from which we received big business, but at the same time feel that our advertising could and should be a whole lot stronger than what it is.

Would be pleased to have you point out our mistakes and weak points, as we are going to get out another circular in the near future, and oblige, Yours truly,

MARSH & HERMAN.

The circular enclosed was really large enough to be a hand bill. It measured 18 x 24 inches, which I believe is too large. In my judgment it would be better to cut the circular in half and get it out twice as often. There are a lot of objections to a circular as big as this. It is more expensive to get out, it is unwieldy and hard to read. As against these disadvantages, I don't know of a single advantage. Here is the circular greatly reduced; so much reduced, in fact, that the layout is about all that can be seen:—

ter, and should have been spaced. A wonderful improvement would have resulted from this—the lines under "Coal Oil" and "Men's Shoes" are only half the width of the others and they are much easier to read in consequence.

In spite of the fact that this circular is open, in my judgment, to criticism, it is nevertheless enterprising, and so impresses you. I should expect it to get business. The offerings are straight from the shoulder and persuasive. Some of the prices are low. But I say again that the thing is too big—it would have been better to print it on both sides.

I have a letter from a correspondent who asks that he be given a personal reply, which I have done. He also asks that his letter be not published, but the matter about which he writes is of such general interest that I feel sure he will let me publish it if I withhold both his name and address:—

—, July 3, 1915.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Would you kindly get up for us an introductory letter of some kind to send out. We intend to send out a double post card each week with a list of specials on the one card and the return card will be left blank for them to mail in their orders to us, and which we will deliver one day each week. We expect to cover the same territory the same day and about the same time each week. We will also carry with us when we deliver a book containing samples of the different lines of piece goods we carry.

We carry a full and complete line of groceries, dry goods, notions, carpets, rugs, linoleums, oil cloths, window shades, curtains, flour, feed, shoes for all members of the family, corsets, men's overalls, blouses, dress and work shirts, underwear, house dresses, aprons, shirt waists, trunks, suit cases, traveling bags, automobile tires and most everything consistent with a general store.

We are going to do this as a means of extending our service and get new business. We also guarantee everything we put out to give absolute satisfaction. The mail order houses get quite a business out of this country and we believe we can scare up some new trade this way. We had thought of issuing small catalogue, but find that will be too expensive. Would you let us know where we might be able to buy the double post cards the most economical? Do not want both stamped, only the one. We will certainly appreciate it very much if you can get us up a little letter that will cover all the things we describe and tell the our mission. As we have the buying capacity of two stores and cash for everything we buy, we are able to buy at rock bottom prices. Get us up something not too lengthy, but to the point. Thanking you in advance.

Yours truly,

The preliminary letter in judgment should quote nothing, should take about the following tone:—

Look for Our Postals from Now On.

Beginning with next Monday, July 19th, we are going to send you each week a postal card advertising some especially juicy special which we feel sure will attract some attention.

We advise forming the habit of both looking for these postals and looking at them.

They will be return postals—you use the blank half to mail your order in.

Take our word, these specials will make people open their eyes. Nothing will be offered that cannot guarantee.

Yours,

Of course Government postal cards cost the same everywhere. Any printer can print them. It will be more convenient to let your local printer do it if you have a good one. By all means have both halves printed—one with the advertisement, and the other with your name and address. Otherwise, some people will use the blank half for their own purposes.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter, in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

California Will Compete With Europe on Glace Fruits.

A $50,000 glazed fruit company has been organized in Southern California to manufacture candied fruits and flowers. One of its managers has returned extensively through European countries studying the processes of preparing high-priced products, and will endeavor to establish an industry which will compete with imported goods. Confectionery imported into the United States during the fiscal year was valued at $289,362.

A SQUARE DEAL TO EVERYBODY

We promise to vigorously exert ourselves during the year of 1915 and to give you low prices, good qualities, prompt service and fair and square treatment. We hope to make it possible for you to say that there is no place to buy goods like M. & H.'s. Now watch us.

Ceresota Flour for Bread

Buy CERESOTA FLOUR right now in hundred pound lots at $3.60

Just think of it. A high grade of Western Flour at this low price. This is a flour that can't be beat in quality, and at a price that is matchless. Therefore our strong recommendation as above.

We think you are aware of the fact that all Flour has advanced very rapidly in the last few weeks and the market is still in a very strong and advancing condition. We did not yet advance and will not until we have given everybody a fair and square shake at our flour, at the old price, if quick action is taken. Of course you understand that we are unable to continue to sell you this Flour indefinitely at present prices quoted.

Therefore we advise you not to hesitate but BUY! BUY!! BUY!!! Isn't that fair?

Another car of Middling to arrive at the Danielsville Station, about the latter part of this month, and will quote you "out of car" price on the following:

We got to have your order so we can notify you to call for your goods upon arrival of same. Let your orders come—we think it's a good buy.

There is too much matter on this circular—the impression you get when you look at it, is that it would take half a day to read it. Does $175 Mean Anything to You Fellows With Windows?

If it does, go in the Lipton Tea window dressing contest, for $175 is what we'll give away in prizes.

Two strong reasons why you should make a Lipton Tea display now-- 1, they're doing a lot of advertising to your customers, and a display will yoke you up with it; and 2, it's the iced tea season. These reasons would be big enough without the $175.

Here are the terms and conditions:—

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes September 1, 1915.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

WHERE the GLASS JAR COMES IN

The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is unusual.

No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass before; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market.

Some Typical Mail Order Advertising Frauds

Live Retailer Digs In to Some Mail Order Offers and Finds What Looks Like Fake. Complains to Post Office Department Against Montgomery Ward & Co., But Gets No Satisfaction. The Paint Joker.

On the 12th of last February it was my pleasure to address a Merchants' Short Course at the University of Minnesota, and the next day I submitted a case against one of the largest mail-order concerns. That concern had advertised a number of articles as being sold at half the usual retail price. If their price was 80 cents they claimed the usual retail price was $1.60. Among other things I purchased a petticoat. This petticoat was listed as having a retail value of $2, our price $1. I had considerable difficulty in matching this up at any price, as the style dated about two or three years back. I found, however, when it had been in, that style had sold around $8.50 to $9 a dozen. I submitted a full statement of the facts to the Post Office Department; but no report has been made on that case as yet. In ordering catalogues since that time there has been only one solitary garment with our price and the usual retail price given.

In Montgomery Ward & Co.'s last issue previous to the current one, they described a chair "worth $4.50; our price $2.90." I invested $3.05 in that chair, and I have two offers from Montgomery Ward & Co. to return the invoice. That catalogue house has been guilty of defrauding and using the mails for that purpose; and I have written my Senator and Congressman. I maintain if the catalogue houses were compelled to give the value they claim to give, within six months time they would be bankrupt. On the other hand, if the catalogue house values were as a matter of fact equal to what they claim to be, within six months time every jobbers and retailer would be forced out of business. I contend the catalogue house ought to give what it advertises, or else advertise what it is giving.

I have with me two yards of toweling that I purchased of a mail-order house; the mail-order price 15 cents, the usual retail price 20 cents. I sent samples to different wholesale houses and asked them to advise me what they could furnish it for, and from three independent sources I got the quotation at 9½ cents, a price that would enable you to meet the catalogue house price and make 35 or 40 per cent. on the sale. It is my plan to run through the catalogues and pick out these prices, and present my side of the story. It is my method to advertise the catalogue price on an article like this, and then call attention to the misrepresentation. I have found that it pays to show up these facts; not in direct sales, perhaps, but for the impression. There is probably no dealer who has not been confronted with the catalogue house price on this article or that.

In one instance I took up their offer on house paint. They advertised that it would cover 250 square feet to the gallon. They figured on a house with more than an ordinary supply of windows and doors. The house figured practically 2,600 square feet, and taking out the doors and windows there was left 2,100 square feet of painting surface. The catalogue house gave eleven gallons as the amount of body paint necessary for this house. As a matter of fact this figures less than 200 square feet of painted surface. I forwarded these dimensions to two paint factories and asked how much paint would be required. Both figured that fifteen gallons would be required to paint a house 20 x 30 x 18, or 188 square feet three coats. Allowing for windows and doors this is about 100 square feet to the gallon. You could buy of these paint factories a good paint for $1.12 a gallon, and on the basis of the covering capacity you would give $2 a gallon for the catalogue house paint. If you are selling paint and will sell it on the basis of what it will cost to paint a house, you will not have any more trouble on paint. It was worth while to investigate the catalogue house advertising on that item. Every mail-order catalogue is full of similar misrepresentations.

In conclusion, I want to urge you to meet the mail-order house price and pay half the freight. I would like to see five hundred merchants take the matter up and make this offer. Boil the mail-order house proposition down and it resolves itself into the following simple facts: First, discrimination in price in favor of the mail-order house. Second, discrimination on the part of the mail-order house as to value by misrepresentation to the consumer. The consumer is not well enough posted to discover lots of these things, and it is the duty of the dealers to know them and to point them out.

Well-Known Philadelphia Jobber Gets Important Appointment.

William T. Kirk, Jr., Head of Kirk, Foster & Co., Wholesale Grocers, Is Appointed to New Jersey State Board of Commerce and Navigation.

Mr. William T. Kirk, Jr., a well-known wholesale grocer of Philadelphia, has been appointed by Governor Fielder, of New Jersey, member of the New Jersey State Board of Commerce and Navigation. This Board went into office July 1, 1915, and takes over the work of the old Riparian Commission, New Jersey Harbor Commission, Deeper Waterways Association and Inspectors of Power Board.

The work is important. It is through the development of waterways that cheaper transportation can be secured, thereby reducing the cost of merchandise to the consumer. One of the projects the Commission is to work for the consummation of the ship canal which the Government has surveyed from Bordentown, N. J., to the Raritan Bay, thereby giving a direct inland waterway from Philadelphia to New York. It is thought this will not only give quick service but a cheaper freight rate between the two great metropolises, and also serve as a link in the interstate coastal waterway which the Atlantic Deeper Waterway Association are working for.

Adams Express Co. Forms Alliance With Larkin to Sell Larkin Goods to Express Co. Employees

Larkin Co. Cuts Prices of Its Stuff to Adams Express Co. Employees, and Later Starts to Work Up Trade Among Its Thousand of Employees, of Course to the Detriment of Regular Retailers.

Since the Interstate Commerce Commission put a crimp in the evil profits of the large express companies, the latter have been doing some very peculiar things in order to hold their business. Parcels post put another crimp in the express companies, and they are rather put to it, nowadays, to live. All this they of course brought on themselves.

One of the most remarkable things done to date is the formation of an affiliation between the Adams Express Co. and the Larkin Co., Buffalo, N. Y., whereby the Adams concern acts as a sort of agent for the sale of Larkin stuff among express company employees. The express company has issued the following letter to all its employees:—

ADAMS EXPRESS COMPANY.
ORDER AND FOOD PRODUCTS BUREAU.

Employees:—A large manufacturer has arranged to supply soaps, toilet articles and food products at a reduction from the regular price as shown in the attached sheet. The manufacturer fully guarantees these goods to be first class, and you are therefore taking no risk in ordering.

Considering this very low price, and in order to increase the revenue of the company, we are anxious that each employee order at least one of these combinations, and at the same time put forth every effort to interest his friends and neighbors in this attractive offer.

Each order should be accompanied by an Adams Express money order for the amount of the purchase, or the goods can be sent C. O. D.

As this is a large concern, and has warehouses at Philadelphia, Pa.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Peoria, Ill., and Chicago, Ill., your order can be sent to our agent at the nearest point to be filled, which will give each section the benefit of the lowest rate.

Pettijohn's

(Rolled Wheat with the Bran) has been one of the most popular breakfast foods for years.

It needs no introduction.

A few months ago we made Pettijohn's much richer in bran.

Physicians agree that bran is Nature's laxative. Pettijohn's contains twenty-five per cent. bran. The form and amount are efficient. The food is natural, inviting and nutritious.

We are now advertising this food in Medical Journals and Women's Publications with a circulation of over 19,000,000.

Are you securing your share of the demand resulting from this advertising?

If you have been unable to secure PETTIJOHN'S (Rolled Wheat with the Bran) drop us a card. We can now supply all parts of the country.

The New York Letter

Austin, Nichols & Co. Start Chain of Economy Jobbing Houses. Profit-Sharing Grocers Co., a Chain Retail Store Concern, Goes by the Board. Rumored New Brazil Coffee Valorization Scheme. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

New York, July 16, 1915.

Messrs. Austin, Nichols & Co., wholesale grocers, have announced a plan during the week which has been one of the principal subjects of discussion among the trade and here. They have just opened a new branch house in Albany, this State, and announce that it is the first of a chain of sixteen wholesale grocery houses which will be operated under the Economy principle. The "Economy" principle has so far been used only in the retail field. It involves the cutting off of all unnecessary expenses, including book-keeping for credit customers, delivery of goods, etc. Economy retail stores are sometimes called "one-man" stores from the fact that they have but one clerk to do everything, who closes the store when he goes out to lunch in the middle of the day. Austin, Nichols & Co. already have branches in New Haven, Waterbury, Bridgeport and Norwich, Conn.; Los Angeles, Cal.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Charleston, S. C.; St. Louis, Mo.; Louisville, Ky., and Indianapolis, Ind. The object is of course to plant branch houses in territories where they can compete with the local jobbers.

The Albany house will start with fourteen salesmen and will do a spot cash business. The plan is thus described by Austin, Nichols & Co.:

Austin, Nichols & Co. claim to be the largest importing, manufacturing wholesale grocery concern in America or the world. We have enjoyed the reputation for many years of being the largest operators in food supplies in this country. We are now opening a branch in Albany, N. Y., for the purpose of taking care of our friends and customers—the retail grocers.

We have watched the work of chain stores, mail order houses and other innovations, and we feel it our duty and privilege to line up and get back of the individual retail grocers who have favored us with their business for many years. This innovation on our part, in opening a branch house in Albany, may upset the grocery market somewhat. It may affect the chain stores and mail order houses, but the advantage to our customers in this innovation are so great that we would have rendered them sorry service had we not brought about a condition by which the individual grocer can successfully compete with any chain store or mail order concern.

Our methods will be new and unique, for we are opening our house in Albany for the purpose of protecting the retail grocer.

Our terms will be net cash—no cash discount—the goods will be sold at our store, 20 Tivoli street. You must buy with cash, and earn your own goods, or arrangements can be made at our office by which the Frazer & Kelly Co. will deliver goods to any point in Albany at 2 cents per hundred pounds, with a minimum charge of 25 cents. Our prices will be based on net cash terms, with no expense attached to the sale whatever. There will be no large clerical force, no credit department; in fact, every possible expense will be eliminated. Our goods are landed from the cars direct to our warehouse.

Orders for our Albany branch will be on the above basis, and no other. No cases will be broken. We will place you in a position that no chain store or any other buyer can possibly own the goods at as low a cost as you if you purchase from Austin, Nichols & Co. A chain store buys for a dozen branch houses, or a hundred, or a thousand branch houses, and his purchasing power, of course, is considerably more than the individual retail grocer, purchasing for one store.

We have 75,000 merchants with whom we are doing business. They are scattered all over America, and in other zones. Our immense purchasing power and our well-known financial standing is what we are putting back of you, Mr. Retail Grocer, and we are the only house in America that has the nerve to do it.

Some figures given out during the week show the enormous increase in the consumption of beef from the Argentine Republic in this country. The United States imported from Argentina during the year, from October, 1913, September, 1914, inclusive, 1,000,000 pounds of beef and products. This supply was worth its weight in gold in piecing out insufficient production of beef in this country.

The trade are watching carefully to see what the new president of the American Sugar Refining Co. will do. He is Earl D. Babst, who formerly vice-president and general counsel of the National Biscuit Co. He became a director of the American Sugar Refining Co. last May and has been studying the

Mr. Babst is perhaps the biggest n who has yet been chosen for office.

Another chain-store concern has e "by the board"—the Profit uring Grocers' Company, which s organized several months ago a Delaware corporation. Its pose was to open 200 stores in w York City and its proposed ital stock is $2,000,000; $1,400,- was offered to the public at a lar a share. So far as the writer learn the enterprise never got anywhere, and the immediate cause of its making an assignment is the bringing of suits against it for about $1,000.

It is said to have considerable as- sets, but not quickly convertible as- sets.

The Profit Sharing Grocers' Cor- poration is now operating stores at 96th street and Amsterdam avenue, 1017 Columbus avenue and 971 West Chester avenue, this city. It claimed to be about to open thirty more, and from that on others would be opened at the rate of about ten per week.

The scheme of the corporation is not materially different from that of almost all of its predecessors. It promised a 10 per cent. saving in the cost of living, but each customer must buy at least one share of stock, and after that was expected to buy coupons, paying cash for them,

Dill Pickles.—Dill pickles "by dozen" are not available during the mer months, but there is a certain who make a specialty of putting in jars, about 10 to the jar, that be retailed profitably at 15 cents, if properly displayed and sensibly ed, you will sell a lot of them. There's something appealing about the ls "Dill Pickles," and, indeed, e's something peculiarly appetizing he eating of them. It may interest to know that dill is an herb, and i a layman's observation, we would that it was a "child of nature." is pulled from the ground in the ral state and laid between the layers umberbers and salt. It seems that salt takes up the strong flavor of dill and is absorbed later by the mber itself.

Barrel of Limes.—May seem a lot some stores to buy, but they are p now, and if you put a big sign he window, "LIMES, 5 CENTS EN," you will be doing something of the ordinary, and you will be ng a good profit on the goods.

Powered Sugar.—It is safe to say 90 per cent. of the women who for powdered sugar mean XXXX, onfectioners' sugar. They don't standard powdered, because it isn't enough for frosting or for "candy ng." After the Domino people commenced to push the one-pound ear- tons we had no end of trouble, until orders were issued to give all custom- ers XXXX who called for powdered.

That settled matters.

Those Old Pickles.—That you have stored away in the cellar and in the storeroom should be brought into the daylight—it's pickle time. People are pickle hungry now, and you can clean up a lot of odds and ends by bargain- like display.

It's your effort that counts—it's get- ting things in salable shape for the rest of the bunch that makes your services valuable.

Start something!

Don't Ask Her "What Price?"—That's confusing—it's irritating. Time enough to give prices and qualify goods when the customer starts it.

But don't you start it!

If the order calls for two pounds butter—write the best butter. If it calls for six cans peas, write 20- cent peas. If it calls for one pound coffee, by all means your best cof- fee. Of course, we refer now to those who seemingly can afford to pay the best prices. A salesman must use some common sense in "sizing up" his customer. Surely, the best buyers ask the price, but in both cases careful judgment has to be exercised.

WITH THE EDITOR

The State of California has a law regarding the packing of fruits which Florida might also adopt with profit. The Sacramento "Bee" thus describes the measure:—

Fruit Frauds Partly Scotched.

The bill establishes a standard for the packing of fresh fruit, for interstate and foreign shipment of cherries, peaches, pears, apricots, plums and prunes. Grapes packed for table use must be of uniform quality and maturity, must be well matured and show a sugar content of not less than 17 per cent. Ballings scale, excepting Emperors, which must show not less than 16 per cent.

Berries must be reasonably uniform in size, quality and maturity throughout the container, and packed in uniform packages of dry quart containing an interior capacity of 67.2 cubic inches, or dry pint containing an interior of 33.6 cubic inches.

Cantaloupes must be placed in standard crate, 12 x 12 x 23½ inches, containing 45 cantaloupes of uniform size and maturity. Jumbo crates, 4½ x 13½ x 23½ inches, containing 12 or 15 cantaloupes of uniform size and maturity.

Boxes, crates, packages or containers of deciduous fruits when packed and offered for sale or for transportation and sale must be marked with the name of orchard, name and post office address of the person, firm, company or organization packing or authorizing packing and the name of locality where fruit is grown.

This is fine. What we are thinking about particularly is that it will stop the mean, foolish practice of facing packages of fruits—putting a perfectly beautiful layer on the top and green inferior little nubbins underneath. Florida shippers are worse about this than the California shippers. Florida strawberry shippers perpetrate the meanest frauds on Northern buyers. Their fruit does not simply run irregular—the fruit below the top layer is totally different from the top layer. The object is to deceive and defraud, of course, but it never does it, except with the most inexperienced buyer. Therefore the Florida shippers who do this are not only knaves, they are fools.

Many thanks for the new Pennsylvania law forbidding handling of fresh meats by anybody except the retail dealer and his employees.

To Keep Hands Off Fresh Meats.

A brief digest of it appears elsewhere in this issue. The law is needed to keep the filthy fingers of prying consumers where they belong. Every dealer in fresh meats sees women come in his store daily and prod and poke fresh meats to see if she can tell whether they are tender. He never knows where the fingers have been before and there are so many nauseating places where they could have been that nobody with any regard for himself feels like taking the risk. If the woman with the fingers would always take the meat away and eat it, nobody would complain, but very often she pokes it and leaves it for others.

Remember that this act does not make it a penal offense for consumers to handle meats. It makes it a penal offense for dealers to allow consumers to handle them. The dealer, not the consumer, will be the defendant. The average dealer will not have the courage to call his customers down when they do this; therefore he should have signs printed: "The Law will Arrest and Fine Me if you Touch or Handle my Meats." The consumer who would do it in spite of this—and some would, doubtless—ought to be flayed alive in the open store.

That is an interesting thing which Austin, Nichols & Co., the New York jobbers, have done, as told in this week's New York letter.

And Now a Chain of Economy Jobbing Houses.

Taking a leaf out of the book of several chain-store retailers, they have opened in Albany, N. Y., the first of sixteen Economy jobbing houses. Nothing will be charged, no packages broken and nothing delivered. The concern already has several branch houses scattered through lower New England, the West and the South. As yet it has not invaded Pennsylvania, but it is understood will do so soon.

There is no reason why a chain of jobbing houses should not succeed as well as a chain of retail houses. When the retail chain stores started it was said they would fail because there were not enough people willing to pay cash. In spite of this prophecy ninety per cent. of the chain-store enterprises have made money and some of them notably the Acme Tea Co. of Philadelphia, have had a perfectly monumental success.

The same prediction would be made about a plan for a chain of cash jobbing houses—"it will not go; there aren't enough retailers able to pay spot cash." We don't believe it. There are enough cash paying retailers in this territory to support the jobbing houses of the Philadelphia and Frankford Associations, and several cash jobbing houses besides.

Austin, Nichols & Co. argue that they can sell retailers through the Economy branches cheaper than the large chain stores can buy, because they are buying for 75,000 retailers while the largest of the chains buy for less than a thousand. That sounds plausible, but we don't believe it, nevertheless. The chain-store concern that buys for five hundred stores, and buys direct from the manufacturer, probably buys at as small a fraction above the manufacturer's cost as the manufacturer would be willing to do for no matter what the quantity was. If there was a difference it would be so tiny as not to make practical difference in the work out of competition.

More Time Given to Comply With Federal Net Weight Law on Package Goods.

Government Says Trade May Have Until Next January to Use Up Labels and Cartons.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

July 15, 1915.

The Department of Agriculture has decided to extend until January 1, 1916, the privilege of using labels and cartons printed prior to May 11, 1914, which do not state the quantity of the contents of packages of food in terms of the largest unit as Food Inspection Decision No. 154 holds that they should, providing the quantity of the contents is otherwise plainly and correctly indicated. For example, it is not proper, under Food Inspection Decision No. 154 to mark a package "Contents 26 Fluid Ounces"; the package should be marked "One and five-eighths pints" or "one pint 10 fluid ounces." The purpose of this decision is to compel quantities to be stated in the form most readily intelligible to most persons. In order to avoid the waste of a large number of labels and cartons, however, which had been printed before this decision was issued, the Department agreed some time ago to permit the use of such labels and cartons which, although they did not comply with the regulations in this respect, were otherwise satisfactory, had been printed prior to May 11, 1914, and indicated an honest attempt to comply with the provisions of the law. The present decision extends the time to which these labels may be used from June 1, 1915, to January 1, 1916, the additional time being granted for the purpose of enabling manufacturers and dealers in food products to dispose of their stocks of labels and to avoid the loss which the immediate enforcement of the regulations in this respect would cause. Until January 1, 1916, therefore, the Department will not recommend proceedings solely upon the charge that the statement of quantity of contents on the package, if otherwise satisfactory, is not in terms of largest unit in the package.

Retailer's Share in Widespread Breakage of Eggs

Contributor Says Eggs, Being Specially Perishable, Should Be Specially Looked After. Suggests Plan of Delivery Which Would Avoid Breakage.

propos of the article in your issue on the widespread breakage of eggs, the retail grocer of course has an important part in this. There is probably no commodity a grocer handles that occasions so much loss as eggs, and the sad part of it is, it's a loss a large percentage of which could easily be eliminated. Eggs when they are received are, of course should be, fresh and unbroken. If they are not, and this continues, the good business judgment of the grocer will suggest to him that he buy his eggs elsewhere. He wanted that all grocers do or could receive their eggs in the best possible condition, where then does the tremendous loss, which a large percentage of grocers suffer, occur? It is in the handling of the eggs comparative to delivery, but the great bulk of it in the delivery it is strange as it may seem, there are grocers who fail absolutely to take account the fact that eggs are the most fragile articles that any merchant has to handle, and instead of providing some special means for their transportation from the carrier to the customers, they are content to place them in a paper bag or package in the delivery box, along with canned goods, potatoes and a hundred and one other unbreakable articles and still expect them to reach their destination safely.

There are carriers on the market that are so designed as to protect the egg from every jar and jolt, thus eliminating entirely the trouble and loss due to breakage. Further on that, they save a wonderful amount of time in the putting up of eggs as well as in the delivering them. One other consideration is an important one, is that the paper dozen of delivering eggs in a suitable carrier that is returnable is decidedly less than the cost of paper bags or packages. Why is it then that in view of this saving of time, trouble, breakage and profit a returnable egg carrier makes it possible that some grocers are still content to go on handling eggs in the old wasteful and profitless style, treating the loss as unavoidable, or perhaps allowing the limited investment that it is necessary to make, in order to install a practical and money making egg handling system, blind them to the greatly increased profit that could be gained through its use.

Don't Let Your Customers Handle Meats Anymore. You May Be Fined.

New Pennsylvania Law Makes It a Punishable Misdemeanor to Let Anybody Touch Fresh Meats Except Your Employees and Yourself. Meats Must Also Be Screened From Insects and Animals.

Under a new Pennsylvania law, just signed by the Governor, any dealer in fresh meats who allows his customers to handle his stock can be arrested and fined. The law is the new meat inspection act of 1915, which gives the State Livestock Sanitary Board the power to inspect all places where meat is sold.

No effort has ever been made to interfere with the practice of consumers going into a meat shop and handling fresh meats, in order to see whether they are tender. Their hands may be dirty, they may be coated with germs. The new law makes the shopkeeper responsible if anybody touches his meats but himself or his employees.

There is also a provision in the new law requiring dealers to protect their meats from flies and other animals by screenings.

Watermelons, which are coming both from Florida and Georgia, are cheap—20 to 35 cents each.

Palatable Tidbits From a Winter Short Course on Retail Merchandising

Some of the Best Things From a Course of Lectures Which the Jobbers and Manufacturers of Sioux City, Iowa, Gave the Retail Trade of That Section.

A man spoke to me one evening after one of these talks (I was speaking in a town of about 1,800 people) about some stock that he wanted to sell. He said, "I have a whole lot of linoleum, but I have not been able to sell it." I found on investigation that he had this in his back room and who was going to buy? If some man or his wife made up his or her mind to come down and buy some linoleum they would come in and ask for it, but no one was going to think about buying linoleum while he kept it back there, and I said to him, "If you are going to sell linoleum get it out where people can take a look at it." Then I said, "I am going to tell you another way. Do you know how many people are moving in this town right now, that moved yesterday, and are going to move tomorrow?" "No," he said. "he did not know anything about it." "Now," I said, "I will venture to say that if you will send a letter to each one of those people who have moved or are going to move you will sell some linoleum. Now is the time to sell it; that is the time people want it, when they are moving." He did this, and cleaned up his stock in that little town of 1,800 that week.—By O. E. Klingaman, who spoke on "The Retailer and His Trade."

The mail-order house has been able to establish a pretty good line of business, partly because of the retailer's attitude that because he was in business people had to trade with him. I was talking with a merchant the other day who took the same identical stand, stating, "I think the man who does not trade in M—— is absolutely disloyal and a traitor to his town." I asked him if he had made any attempt to reach these people, and he replied, "No, sir, I am in business here and they know where to find me." I asked how prosperous his business was and how long he had been there, and he replied sixteen years. I asked him how much his stock had grown, if he had any bigger stock than he had sixteen years ago, and if he had any stuff that he had not turned over, and he replied, "No, but I have some goods that I had ten years ago." I said, "Yes, and if you continue that attitude toward the buyer, you will continue to keep them ten years more."

I have not figured on this mail-order proposition much, but I can tell you one thing. We were in a certain town in Minnesota last year that was surrounded by good farming country. I had an acquaintance with a number of the men in the bank, and I checked through the bank because we could not check through the post office, but I found the bank had sent to Montgomery Ward & Co., Sears, Roebuck & Co., and one other Chicago house something like $50,000 in the year 1913, from the territory tributary to this one town of possibly 1,500 people. Fifty thousand dollars would be a very nice item to add to any store doing business in that town; $50,000 would be a nice item to distribute in a town of 1,500, and all would struggle for that business. If a man would come to you and say, "I have $50,000 worth of business that I want to place," wouldn't you make a tremendous struggle to secure it? You would say, "Why, give me that business. Of course I want it." If I were to go to you with that kind of a proposition, you would give me the most kindly treatment you could think of. You would price your goods and display them to me, and go right after that business. Now that business is getting away from you all the time.—

By O. A. Klingaman, who spoke on "The Competitive Power of the Towns."

I want to call your attention to the other end of the business of retailing—that is, selling. You have got to have good selling if your business is to be a success. Not very long ago I went into a little village store in Wisconsin. The store is run by a father and son, the son about sixteen, a nice, husky looking young fellow. The father is a fine man and a good citizen in every way. At the time I made this particular visit there was a traveling salesman in the back part of the store. He had showed his samples, the order had been made out, and he, the merchant and myself were standing and talking. Just then a lady came into the front part of the store and stood there by one of the counters. She did not look back where we were except to see that we stood there. I had been used to stores where they were supposed to jump when customers came in, where they were supposed to break off in the middle of a sentence to wait on a customer; and it seemed to me five minutes, anyway it was a long time before any one made a move. It made me nervous to see her stand there waiting. Finally the boy started. The boy apparently was the one who was supposed to wait on customers when there was only one customer to be waited on. I would like to show you how he did it. He did not hurry up to meet her, he was not interested at all, and he came in a gait that was something like the slouch you see in some of the fashion magazines. When he finally got to her he turned his body and head and, with a glassy eye, said, "What do you want?" This is what actually happened. The woman told what she wanted and he went and got it. No other word was said. She laid the price on the counter and picked up the parcel. He did not say a word. She walked out and he came back where we were. That is an example of what should not happen. Within ten minutes time the father, in talking with the salesman and myself, made this remark: "You would be surprised at the amount of business the mail-order houses are getting out of this town. The number of packages that come into this depot every day is simply remarkable." I wondered if there was any connection between those two things.—Paul H. Neystrom, who spoke "Salesmanship."

which coupons were exchangeable for merchandise at the stores of the corporation. There is also a premium scheme in connection with the plan.

The trade have taken much interest during the week in the report that Brazil was planning to put another coffee valorization scheme through. It is a matter of recent recollection how the Brazilian Government artificially increased the price of a large quantity of Santos coffee a few years ago by withdrawing it from the market, and only feeding it out when the market would take it at a high price. The new scheme is said to be intended to finance the crop of Sao Paulo (Santos) coffee; $45,000,000 worth of notes will be issued to the planters as against this crop, coffee to be taken as security and stored until such time as the demand will take it.

Brazil is said to be rather hard hit by the fact that Germany and Austria, which usually take together nearly three and a half million bags of its coffee, have this year been unable to take but little.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet with firmness of Indian Ceylons a principal feature. Rice still buying. Everything steady and firm.—Brazil valorization runs strengthens coffee to some extent but the larger receipts in Brazil have caused slight fractional decline in Rio and Santos. Mills are unchanged.—Sugar, both raw and refined, unchanged; demand fair. New domestic beet large. Prices rather weak.—Soybeans unsettled. Predicted advance not appeared.—Canned tomatoes slightly weaker. Other canned goods unchanged and dull.—Wool still in the speculative class, very sensitive to varying crop reports. Week closes with market somewhat off.—Flour quiet, strong at an advance of about 1 cent above the recent quotations. Dried fruits all dull and unchanged with prunes firmest thing on list.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market during the week has had no changes. From the standpoint of the holder of a good stock of the market is in a highly satisfactory condition. Old tea is more nearly tested than has been the case for seasons, and the demand for new is active on account of only a comparatively small supply. All new teas steady to firm and the lower grades particularly high.

Coffee.

The coffee market these days shows considerable uncertainty. All grades of Santos were steady to firm on a slightly higher basis until a few days when the report of larger receipts from Brazil depressed the market, possibly slightly. There is no speculation what-so-ever to-day, and buyers are taking only for their actual wants. Mild grades are unchanged and in moderate demand. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

There has been no change in sugar during the week, all the refiners selling at 6 cents, though quoting at 5 cents. There is considerable doing in domestic beet sugar, the crop of which promises to be very large. This is already offered as far East as New York at 5.80 cents and further West at 5.90 cents. The consumptive demand for refined sugar is quite fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Corn is unchanged for the week in compound syrup. The demand for the latter is quiet and prices unchanged. Sugar syrup and molasses are scarce, and prices are steady to firm on a basis higher than a few weeks ago. The consumptive demand is light, but there is considerable foreign demand for syrup, and the large demand for black strap molasses, which is a by-product, has affected the market for the other grades. Black strap molasses is used very largely in the manufacture of alcohol for war purposes.

Fish.

The situation in Norway mackerel continues firm. The supply of mackerel on this side is becoming diminished and prices, while not higher than a week ago, are still firmer. Norway mackerel will not be offered for some weeks. Irish and shore mackerel are not cutting any particular figure, especially Irish. The catch of mackerel at the present time is very large. Cod, hake and haddock as usual at this season, and unchanged in price. Domestic sardines gone to pieces and quotations are as low as $2.15 per case of quarters, f. o. b. in a large way. As a matter of fact, there have been rumors about the market during the week that the price might go to $2, or even $1.75, but these were not given very much credence. That the market is demoralized, however, is unquestioned. Imported sardines continue scarce and high. Salmon of all grades is unchanged and in fair demand.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged in first hands, but second hand holders are willing to shade the market 2½ cents. The outlook for the pack in fair, although the season will undoubtedly be late. New pack peas are still very much demoralized, on account of the large carry-over on spot peas. The quality is good, but the demand is very light and the price extremely low. Corn is unchanged and quiet. Apples dull at ruling quotations. California canned goods, both spot and future, weak and dull. Small Eastern staple canned goods show no change and light request.

Dried Fruits.

Spot prunes have shown no change during the week. The demand is moderate and prices steadily maintained. Futures are looking up a trifle and should be quoted at a small fraction higher. One of the causes is the fact that the growers have been able to sell about one-fifth of the expected yield to England. Peaches, apricots, raisins, currants and the other dried fruits are dull and unchanged in price. Apricots are cheap, ruling about 3 cents below a short time ago.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are a shade less than they were last week. The demand is fair. Marrows are unchanged and quiet. California limas are a shade off, both on spot and to come forward; large supply is the reason. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The butter market is steady at a decline of 1 cent per pound for the week. The unusual weather has persisted, and in consequence the quality of the butter which has been produced up to this time has been very fancy. Seasonably warm weather has appeared, however, and this will not only curtail the make, which will probably decrease from now on, but will very likely affect the quality. From now on butter should show heat defects. The consumptive demand is about normal for the season and no change in the situation seems in sight.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at an advance of 1 cent per dozen. There is an increased consumptive demand, due to the much shorter supply of fine eggs, which in turn is caused by the warm weather. The percentage of fancy eggs is at present light, and the outlook until the warm weather is over, is for a firm and high market.

Cheese.

The make of cheese has been larger than usual this season, and the quality has averaged fancy, owing to the very good weather. The market is steady at a decline of ½ cent for the week, due to the lack of export trade and the light consumptive demand. Future prices depend very considerably upon the demand, and unless this increases, the market will probably decline again.

Provisions.

Smoked meats are not selling as well as they should at this season of the year and the consumptive demand is reported only fair. In consequence, the market is barely steady on the present basis. The demand is also light for pure lard and lard substitutes, which are ruling about ⅛ cent below a week ago. Barreled pork and beef are unchanged and in light demand. Dried beef and canned meats are steady and unchanged in price.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Our agent in Holland reports that Germany is at the present time taking all the cargoes of herrings which are being caught by the Dutch fishermen. Of course, the herrings now caught are not of keeping quality, and would not be fit for export to America. The first new herrings of keeping quality will not be ready for shipment before the end of this month, and even then it will be rather risky to ship any of these new fish to America. It is, of course, natural that in view of the very strong demand, we shall have to reckon with high opening prices for Holland herrings this season.

The fishing of sardines in Norway is now in full swing, and results are fairly satisfactory. Of course, in view of the very heavy demand from the countries at war, prices are ruling very high, and in fact, higher than we are willing to pay for the American market. The cheaper grades of sardines are very scarce, and are practically out of the market for the present. In Portugal, unfortunately, there is no catch at the present time, and there is quite a scarcity of good, well-known brands of Portuguese sardines in this market, particularly of the ¼ tins, and prices here show a very natural advance. We have no advice from France of any fishing of sardines at the present time, although fishing should be in full swing under ordinary circumstances. We have reports from our people in France, but they mention nothing in regard to the catch of sardines, and have nothing to offer. This is only natural, because the French government is taking practically all the oil sardines and sprats in oil which they can get hold of for army purposes.

STROHMEYER & ARPE Co.

New York.

Spices.

There are few changes of any consequence in prices since our report of last week. The market, however, is somewhat firmer, with upward tendency.

Pepper.—Steadier. Many parcels have been disposed of during the week. There are no new arrivals expected of Tellicherry and Aloppy before the late fall.

Cloves.—Spot prices are far below import cost. Prices, we believe, are likely to react and go higher.

Pimento.—Very dull and low. The demand is also light at present.

Nutmegs.—In better demand at slightly lower prices. The supply here is unusually short.

Cassias.—All grades are cheaper; that is, for spot goods than for goods to arrive. Demand has not been up to normal, but will likely increase from now on.

Gingers.—Neglected recently, though it is reported African is much higher in England. This, no doubt, being due to shortage of supplies.

Green Ginger Root.—In big demand, with little or no stocks in the country. On account of shortage it is predicted much higher prices will rule.

Paprikas.—Unchanged and in fair demand, season considered.

Tapiocas.—In fair demand at slightly firmer prices.

McCORMICK & Co.

Standard Canned Goods.

Developments in the market in this section during the week were interesting in several directions. The demand for canned goods broadened materially and covered a larger number of articles, with fair indications of a wider market during the remainder of the month. Not that there was any big buying of any one article, but the orders were more numerous and the average size of them was larger, while the distribution was as extensive as it was in June. In dollars and cents the volume of business is still very far from equaling that of the years when general market conditions were normal, but the redeeming feature is that this market continues to be the base of supplies for the general trade of the country.

There was an active demand all week for tomatoes, and every order called for rush shipment, the same character of buying that prevailed during June. The canners showed a disposition to accept any desirable business that was offered, and in some instances the price of No. 2 tomatoes was shaded under that of the week previous to meet the requirements of the buyers. There is, in consequence, larger buying of that size, and intending buyers may do well to look after them in the coming week. No. 3 and No. 10 tomatoes were active, too, the latter showing unexpected firmness at the close to-day. The status of the market for future tomatoes is unchanged, both as to the prices and demand.

String beans and wax beans were again quite active, the unusually low prices being the incentive to purchase them freely. When a staple article can be bought at such attractive prices, it is safe property for a jobber to own. Spot corn of the cheaper grade was fairly active and stronger during the week. Sweet potatoes, for both spot and future delivery, were more active than they were last week and the sellers are less inclined to book further orders at to-day's quotations. For the other lines of vegetables there was a light demand, and no changes in the prices, except that sauer kraut is a shade lower.

The blackberry crop is now at its height in this section, and the price for the canned berries is low enough to justify liberal purchases. An active market for them is expected. Strawberries were again active during this week, and raspberries shared in the demand to lesser extent; both of them look firm ahead. Gooseberries and blueberries are dull, selling only in little lots to fill assorted shipment. Pears and apples continue to be bought in medium sized lots for prompt shipment; no demand for future delivery. Some little orders for spot peaches are coming in; no buying, at all, for future delivery. Pie graded pineapples and the medium grade of sliced pines are in light demand; the higher grades are dull. Cherries were dull this week, both red and white.

MARKET NOTES.

Nearby tomatoes are now in full swing and the price has dropped about half. It is now 50 to 80 cents. The crop looks big.

The best Georgia peaches are $1.75, but considerable of the receipts range from $1 to $1.25. The demand is good.

Corn is starting to come from nearby points and the price ranges from 50 to 65 cents. A little sugar corn is coming.

Lima beans are in from nearby points and the first brought $4. The quality is good.

Costs Only Six Cents an Animal to Inspect Meat.

The fact that the cost of Federal meat inspection is less than 6 cents for each of the millions of animals slaughtered was brought out in a paper by Dr. George Ditewig, of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture, presented before the annual meeting of the American Academy of Medicine. Some of his statements were as follows:—

In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, inspection was maintained at a total of 893 establishments in 244 cities and towns in the United States. The total of animals inspected at the time of slaughter was 56,909,000, and the number of these passed on slaughter inspected was 56,473,000. The quantity of meats and products condemned on re-inspections, on account of having become tainted, rancid or otherwise unwholesome, amounted to several million pounds.

The sum appropriated by Congress for meat inspection for that year was $3,200,000, within which sum the service was maintained. In other words, the cost to the people of the United States was less than 6 cents for each of the 56,909,000 animals slaughtered. This charge covered the entire inspection, from the live animal to the final examination of the meats and the finished products when ready for delivery to dealers or customers.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In your issue of July 5th you commented upon a letter addressed to you by Snader & Co. under date of June 28, 1915. I am thinking you would be pleased to read the book we send you herewith—"Ten Years of Success."

Furthermore, you should know that non-agency life insurance, while only ten years old in America, is one hundred and fifty years old in England. The old Equitable in London has never had an agent. I we did not encourage new institutions with new ideas, would we not revel so much in antiquities that we would be likely to progress backwards? If we waited until everything new became old, how far forward would we be likely to get?

In America, fortunately, some people are so enterprising that they encourage experiments that are underlain with fundamental truth. That is the reason why the Postal gets on pretty well, and I am thinking you will yet be encouraging your patrons to look kindly upon what the Postal is doing for the public; you a medium of publicity and the Postal a publicity company we ought to be moved by the same motives.

Very sincerely yours,
WESLEY SISSON,

The defendants, who have been on trial since June 22d, were tried jointly on two indictments, which contained counts, one charging conspiracy to defraud and nine charging fraud. On conspiracy charges the defendants were found not guilty. The defendants were Dennis Kelly, W. H. Eberst, M. Corbett and W. H. Kelly. To all you lucky gents with $7.50, I want to tell you a great way to spend it. Buy a Little Wonder Electric Egg Tester. It's advertised this week by the North Star Egg Case Co., Quincy, Ill., and a picture of it is in the ad. This tester doesn't need a dark room and you could make all kinds of a hit putting a clerk in the window with it and letting him test eggs. "How We Can Afford to Guarantee Every Egg We Sell to be a Fresh Egg" could be the sign. Every grocer ought to have some kind of an tester. I don't see how you keep store without it. It saves all kinds of loss—eggs are a terrible proposition at most. This Little Wonder Electric Tester is the greatest thing I ever saw. I go to bed till you've sent me one.

JIMMY MAND

HERE IS YOUR QUESTION ANSWERED

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Unloading Grouches on Other People.

Wouldn't it be a great stunt if we could all have somebody to tote around with us to unload grouches on? I think that's the best idea I've ever had, and I've had some peaches in my time.

Everybody has to unload grouches some time. You can't keep 'em corked up—if they try to they'll bust you wide open. It's best to let 'em out, and the only way you can let 'em out is to unload 'em on somebody, and that ain't fair, as a rule, for nine times out of ten, it's somebody that ain't to blame.

Last Saturday I went into my boss's office and got a quick smack in the face that made me see stars for a minute. He lit into me something fierce about some little thing I hadn't put into an order—didn't amount to a hill of beans. I started to yell back and in two seconds we'd have had a regular cat fight, when all of a sudden it came to me, "Oh, what's the use of your getting all het up, Hector?" (I call myself Hector once in a while because it has such a bully stylish sound). So I walked out and into a book-keeper that sit there grinning to split his ears. I was some warm, for all the gas hadn't escaped yet, and was just about to light into him, when he told me:—

"Mustn't mind the boss this morning. His car got on fire yesterday and he didn't have any insurance on it."

I felt like going back and telling him I didn't set his blamed car on fire, but oh what was the use again?

What the boss ought to have is somebody with a thick hide to sit around and take all his cussings. If it was somebody's job he wouldn't give a ding and the old man would get his relief just the same.

Not long ago I got another cussing out from a customer that was simply boiling over at a break our office had made over a credit. I ain't the office, you know, and I didn't make the break, but I was there from the house and I was the only one he could light into. He lit, too, and I lit back and just before the blood come I had sense enough to get out.

Just as I was going out the door I happened to step on a fool dog that was loafing about the place and came darned near falling down and cracking my wooden nut. As it was, I tied my liver in a knot trying to hold up.

I'll be sorry till I die at the things I said to that beast. It's a wonder he didn't chew me. I suppose he was afraid of getting ptomaine poisoning. But any way I walked away after that, all cooled off and feeling fine. I don't know what the dog did—maybe he took it out on some cat. I hope he did if it would have given him as much relief as it gave me.

Now I say that both the customer and me ought to have had private secretaries or something that we could have spit out on without hurting anybody. I feel sorry about that dog. Maybe he was a big chief in his society. Anyway he saved my life, for if I'd have walked a mile without something to blow out on I'd have bust with apoplexy.

It's a funny thing about these grouches that have to be spit out. To get any relief you've got to spit 'em out on something alive. You can't do it on a stool or a chair or anything like that.

Take it from me, there's a chance here for a new business.

I remember doing this thing—only once—on my wife. I got called down once at the office for something that wasn't my fault at all—not a 'blamed bit—and they said so afterward and tried to fix it up. I went home with everything turned sour inside of me and let it all out on my wife for some little, trifling thing she did. It was so blamed foolish and small I don't even remember what it was.

Well, after it was all over it come to me what a blamed yellow hound I was—doing a thing like that, and I went to her and told her so and settled a million dollars on her then and there to show her I was sorry. That's the only time I ever did it on her, but I've done it on other things and other people. That dog was one. If I ever see him again

I'm going to make it up to him by give him a paper of tacks or something.

All of us do it—it's pretty much ain't it? And it could all be fixed nice if we could have somebody pointed to take it as a regular business. Because there's times when we have to let out—no doubt about that.

Lots of people find it better to make their own ice cream, and a display of condensed and evaporated milk, etc., will be timely. First of all, make a large neat sign card in the rear like the illustration. Then make several groups of the different size cans of the milk along the sides and the rear. In the center toward each side place two ice cream freezers (any hardware store should be glad to lend them for his own advertising), and between the freezers place three bags of ice cream salt. In the front of the window place groups of threes of the different extracts. In a convenient place on each side of the window make a pyramid of chocolate.

320.—The Eighty Per Cent. Clause in Fire Insurance Policies.

I have received the following letter from a Pennsylvania reader. It raises a somewhat new question highly important to every man who carries fire insurance:—

Will you kindly explain what the true meaning is of the clause in a fire insurance policy that's known as the 80 per cent. clause? We are now arguing with our insurance company over it, without result as yet. I understand all fire insurance policies contain this clause, but it seems that few know it, as several men who carry insurance on their own stock and buildings, and who I have asked to explain it to me, say they never heard of it. The local agent did not seem to understand what it meant until he had written on to the company.

About a month ago we had a fire and the actual loss on building and stock was $4,000. The actual value of building and stock is about $14,000, and we carried $7,000 insurance. I find all our policies contain the 80 per cent. clause, and I was under the impression that it meant that we could not get more than 80 per cent. of the loss, in case of fire, but it seems the company contends we do not get even that much. The agent attempts to explain it on some ground of proportion, but I will not attempt to give you his explanation, for I do not understand it. Please let me know just where I stand under this clause.

I have received several letters from time to time about this 80 per cent. clause, but have not attempted much in the way of an answer, because insurance is very technical, and this hardly seemed like a question of law. The queries persist, however, and as there really is a legal question involved, I have now gone into the matter and think I can explain it so that every one can understand. Let me say that I have never investigated a question in which there seemed to be so much ignorance and diversity of opinion as there is in this case. Even some insurance agents frankly express doubt as to what the clause means and the majority of insured persons don't even know the thing exists. Whether it is so intended or not, the 80 per cent. clause is one of the biggest jokers in an insurance policy.

Following is the form in which the 80 per cent. clause usually appears in fire insurance policies:—

REDUCED RATE AVERAGE CLAUSE.

In consideration of the reduced rate at which this policy is written, it is expressly stipulated and made a condition of this contract that this company shall be liable for no greater proportion of any loss than the amount hereby insured bears to 80 per cent. of the actual cash value of the property described herein, at the time when such loss shall happen.

Not easy to grasp at first glance, but when analyzed it is clear enough. The object is to get you to carry at least 80 per cent. as much insurance as the property is worth—the companies admit that. If you do not carry 80 per cent. then the company's liability drops below 100 per cent. of the loss in case of fire.

Let me illustrate that. You have a stock worth $5,000 and the policy of insurance which you carry on it contains the 80 per cent. clause. Under this, to protect yourself, you should carry at least $4,000 insurance. If you do that, you can collect for the full loss, provided of course it is not more than $4,000.

But suppose you carry only $3,000 insurance. You have a fire and the loss is $3,000. Instead of collecting $3,000, which you could have done had you carried $4,000, you will collect only $2,250, for this reason: The clause says that if you do not carry 80 per cent. of insurance, the company shall be liable only for the proportion of the loss that the amount of your insurance bears to 80 per cent. of the full value of the property. If the amount of your insurance is only half of 80 per cent. of the full value of the property, then the company will only be liable for one-half the loss. To go on with the above illustration, the $3,000 which you carried is three-fourths of $4,000 which is 80 per cent. of the full value of the stock. Therefore the company will pay three-fourths the loss, or $2,250.

Suppose your stock again to be worth $5,000, and you carry only $2,500 insurance—50 per cent. instead of 80 per cent. of the total value. If the loss is $3,000, you will collect $1,500, just 50 per cent.

I have known men who had stock up to $10,000, but who carried as little insurance as $2,000 or $3,000, on the principle that nowadays few fires are total losses, and probably a small sum would be sufficient to pay the expenses of a fire and do whatever replenishing is necessary. If the policies of such insurance as this contain the 80 per cent. clause, the holders may find themselves very badly off indeed. Say their stock is worth $10,000. They should carry 80 per cent., or $8,000. They actually carry $2,000. They have a fire and the loss, as they figured, is only $2,000. If they had known what they were about, the plan would have worked out all right, but their policy contained the 80 per cent. clause, and they did not know it. Therefore their case will figure out like this: Their $2,000 insurance is only one-fourth of the 80 per cent., therefore the company's liability is limited to one-fourth the loss, or $500.

There is no use suing an insurance company on any other theory of the 80 per cent. clause, for this is assuredly the correct one, and your suit will never get anywhere.

Question: M. J. M., South Bethlehem, Pa.—I would like to have a little information in regards to what is to me a very serious matter. I live in a section of the town where the water pressure is extremely weak, so much so that at times we have no water at all. That applies to a large section of the town which is on an elevation. I have properties in which I have considerable trouble in keeping tenants on account of lack of water. Various property holders have complained to the water company, but have received nothing but promises. Above conditions have existed several years and are constantly growing worse on account of new buildings being constructed. We are at the mercy of the water company, as they have no opposition in South Bethlehem.

What course would you suggest to follow? Would you advise applying to Public Service Commission for relief?

Can the water company legally collect full water rates while supplying such miserable service?

Answer.—Your water company, though I presume it is a private enterprise, is still a public service corporation, and will be required to render adequate service at a reasonable price. If the service is adequate, or if the price is unreasonable, you should complain to Public Service Commission, which will order the company to increase its facilities if it is necessary and can reasonably be done. Of course, South Bethlehem, as I remember, is a hilly place, and the inadequacy of the water service may be due to some engineering difficulty which cannot be overcome. If it is merely to the company's failure to keep its plant up to date, the Commission will probably order it to do so as soon as you prove the fact.

Question: Pen Argyl, Pa.—I closed find an application for membership in American Grocers' Society. Would a member be liable in case the company failed, as you know if they are really incorporated?

Please return the application and do not publish my name.

Answer.—This scheme has been several times commented on in this paper. The application merely describes for so many shares of paid and non-assessable stock the capital stock of the American Grocers' Society at $15 a share, payable so much down and balance in installments.

This concern is incorporated, therefore if it fails, a subscriber is liable only for the balance of his subscription, if it has not been paid in full. He is not liable for the corporation's debts.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely state in full all the facts bearing on the question and all questions should be so framed to avoid misconstruction on one side of the sheet only. Should be received at this office no later than Tuesday of each week to insure an answer in the Monday

ing. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All letters received will be answered at charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The Apollo Business Men's Association have just concluded a Boomer which was a big success. All members co-operated and used large display space to herald the sale to people.

The stores participating in the sale were distinguished by a window sign, which was a red circle. Crowds were in town all the week and it was an event that will long be remembered.

The secretaries' meeting to be held at the State convention an award will be made to the secretary writing the best paper, the subject of which is to be "What Is Most Needed to Make an Organization a Success?"

The programme for the convention is now worked out by the committee and promises to be one of practical value to every delegate. The speakers who have consented to address the convention are practical business men and their messages will be of great interest.

Mr. Smedley addressed the merchants of East Stroudsburg on July 12th and the merchants of Manheim on July 15th.

Merchants of Johnstown will hold a monster picnic on July 29th. A feature of the day will be a large demonstration for the use of such manufacturers who desire to display, demonstrate their goods or give out samples. A nominal charge for this service will be made. Those interested should write to Secretary George McGary for further information.

The big picnic of the Pittsburg Association will be held on July 21st. A Ford auto car is one of the big prizes of the day.

The General Convention Committee of the State Association will meet the Local Committee at Meadville during the coming week.

Great interest centers on the awards under the Pennsylvania Plan. Associations are working hard to be counted among the successful ones. Here is a list of the manufacturers who have made it possible to push State organization so far ahead and whose goods count in the awards: Franklin Sugar Refining Co., carton sugar; Borden's Condensed Milk Co., condensed milk; Corn Products Refining Co., Karo; Kingsford's Argo starch and Mazola; William Wrigley, Jr., Co., Spearmint and Double Mint Gum; Jos. Tetley & Co., Inc., Tetley's tea; Woolson Spice Co., "Golden Sun" coffee and spices; Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co., Sunshine biscuits; H. O. Wilbur & Sons, cocoa and chocolate; The Diamond Match Co., Safe Home matches.

These manufacturers have shown their willingness to help the merchant with real money. Reciprocate; help them by pushing their goods.

Seven hundred dollars has been appropriated by the Pennsylvania Plan Committee towards paying the mileage of the delegates to the convention. This means that every association can afford to be represented.

New crop apples are in from nearby points, chiefly Delaware and New Jersey. The best Star apples bring $1 per basket, from that grading down to 25 cents. This is below last year's market.

Can be put on to any Apple, Orange, Grapefruit, Cantaloupe or vegetable crate, without tools, nails or screws. Then by placing the boxes on top of each other, you create an attractive space-saving Display. Ask for literature and prices.

that very morning and how mad Mrs. Jones was when she saw them, and he didn't know of the other times, every week, that the same thing had happened on the different wagons. Perhaps fewer eggs broken, but the customer always tearing mad. We fellows simply couldn't help it. The paper bags and packages didn't protect the eggs. We didn't always tell the boss every time we broke an egg either. There was enough excitement without stirring up his ire. We simply put up enough eggs ourselves to make good the loss and took them to the customer.

Things are different now since the boss gave us Star Egg Carriers and Trays. We haven't had a broken egg since we started using them. It surely saves me a lot of time and trouble; the boss swears it's the best investment he ever made—and his customers, I'd simply hate to have to leave them eggs in paper bags or packages again.

Perhaps there's a thought here for you, Mr. Grocer. Our booklet tells all about the Star System. Write for it.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed please find several of our circulars which we get out weekly. Kindly point out the weak places in these and mention how we can improve on same, and oblige an old subscriber.

Yours truly, PAUL B. ALBENESIUS.

Some of these circulars were printed on very fair paper, and some were printed on very poor paper. I suppose the readers of this paper get very tired of my never-ending talk about the quality of paper used for circulars, but I can't conscientiously stop it as long as it is needed. These circulars range in size from 6 x 9½ to 8½ x 11, and reveal the Albenesius store as a pretty enterprising place. According to the imprint on the bottom, the store is getting its printing done at two places—the Crescent Printing Co. and John J. Furlong. Frankly, I don't think much of the Crescent Co.'s work. The whole job, including the condition and combination of the type, is inferior. The Furlong printing is not so bad. He seems to have a better assortment of type and better judgment as to using it.

Here is what I consider to be the best circular of the batch:—

the reader's time. The name already appears in its proper place at the bottom, and of course the whole object of the advertisement is to get people to send orders, so neither of the two lines has any point. The heading would have been clearer without them. Then I should have quoted the regular prices for the goods advertised. I can't understand why every advertiser can't see this—it makes a bargain so much stronger when the regular price is given side by side with the bargain price. I notice in some of the Albenesius circulars the regular price has been given and sometimes it has been handled this way, "worth 30 cents, our price 19 cents the peck." I don't think the "worth" scheme fits the grocery business very well. To say a peck of potatoes is "worth" so much doesn't seem to be appropriate, somehow. Still it is better than quoting only the bargain price.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Collapsible Barrel Latest Invention.

A new collapsible barrel has been invented by a New Kensington, Pa., man, which is expected to be of great value to all shippers of such articles as potatoes, fruits, sugar, salt, lime, rivets, nails, etc. The barrel, when it has been emptied can be taken apart, packed together and returned to the shipper for use again. This new type of barrel can be built at a cheaper cost than the ordinary wooden barrel, and the assembling of its parts will consume about one minute. The wooden barrel or keg, now in use, is built as cheaply as possible because it cannot be used twice on account of its bulk being too great to return to the shipper. Ten of these new barrels, when collapsed and packed will occupy the space used by one ordinary barrel now. It is expected that this new kind of a barrel will be of great financial benefit in saving on barrels from the standpoint of both consumer and producer.

First Half of 1915 Shows Many More Failures Than Same Period of 1914.

But the Second Quarter Was Much Better Than the First. More Failures in 1915 But Smaller Average Liabilities.

We have received the official report of mercantile failures for the first six months of 1915. Those who have read the monthly reports of failures published in this paper are prepared for the statement that the number of failures show a decided increase over the first months of 1914. The figures show 12,740 failures in all lines during the first six months of 1915, against 8,543 during the same period of 1914.

D'ye Know, You Haven't Got So Much Time on the $175 Window Dressing Contest?

It closes September 1st next, which is only five weeks off. Realize that?

Do you understand that we are going to give away One Hundred and Seventy-five Dollars in prizes for the best window displays of Lipton's Tea? There are two strong reasons why you should make a Lipton Tea display now—1, they're doing a lot of advertising to your customers, and a display will yoke you up with it; and 2, it's the iced tea season. These reasons would be big enough without the $175.

Here are the terms and conditions:—

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes September 1, 1915.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Doesn't This Date Tell You Something?

'This is the date Knight's Cooking Extracts first decorated grocers' shelves. Time, skill and experience combined have added to the perfection of these goods each year. If an old lady or a child is sent for a cooking extract without being told to get a certain brand, they'll ask for Knight's by instinct. This name naturally identifies itself with flavoring extracts in their minds. It's a household word and stands for the highest standard of excellence.

Court Refuses to Compel Cream of Wheat Co. to Sell Great A. & P. Tea Co.

Refuses Application for Injunction Made Recently by the Tea Co. Because It Was Cut Off for Slashing the Price in Its Economy Stores. Court Says Cream of Wheat Co. Can Choose Its Own Customers. First Decision Under Clayton Act.

The result which this paper predicted in the Cream of Wheat Co.'s suit has come to pass precisely as prophesied. The New York Court has refused to give the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. an injunction against the Cream of Wheat Co. to prevent the latter from cutting it off the direct buying list.

Readers of this paper will remember that some time ago the Cream of Wheat Co. found fault with the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. because the latter had a number of its Economy stores cut the price. The Cream of Wheat Co. at the same time refused to sell the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., and also made it very plain that it did not wish any others of its customers to sell the tea company. At that stage the tea company asked for an injunction against the Cream of Wheat Co., on the ground that the latter was setting up a monopoly in violation of the Clayton Anti-trust Act. The Cream of Wheat Co. defended on the ground that it has a monopoly in Cream of Wheat and was not therefore obliged to sell anybody it did not wish to sell. The Cream of Wheat Co. claimed that it had a right to cut the tea company off for any reason or no reason. The court upheld this view fully. A portion of the opinion is as follows:—

Cream of Wheat is not a necessity; it is not even a staple article of commerce. If it be a commodity at all, the commodity and the name are synonymous. Its continual existence depends upon the defendant's ability to control the marketing of its own product. The doing of what the plaintiff wishes would take from every grocer, near an "economy store," the last incentive to buy any Cream of Wheat, and collectively such grocers are more important to the public and the defendants than is the plaintiff. If the injunction was issued against the defendants many retailers would be injured, and the microscopic benefit to a small portion of the public would last only until the plaintiff was relieved from further competition by the 14-cent grocer, when it, too, would charge what the business would normally and naturally bear. In short, it is plainly not the defendant that pursues methods whose hardship and injustice have often been commented upon. In my judgment, the prevention or limitation of practices such as the plaintiff's (so far as is consistent with statute law) is the reverse of unreasonable.

How can it be called substantial and unreasonable restraint of trade to refuse to deal with a man who avowedly is to use his dealing to injure the vendor; when such vendor makes and sells only such advertisement begotten articles as Cream of Wheat, whose fancy name needs the nursing of carefully handled sales to maintain an output of trifling moment in the food market, is beyond my comprehension.

There is no proof that the defendant refused or threatened to refuse to sell to anyone who sold to the plaintiff; it did request its chosen customers not to deal with the plaintiff.

If the defendant's actual scheme of interstate business is unlawful, the United States certainly, and now perhaps an individual plaintiff, can put it out of business, but neither the nation nor any individual can take away its property with or without compensation for the private use of anyone.

There is an intimation in the next to the last paragraph of the above—although this is not actually decided—that had the Cream of Wheat Co. refused to sell anybody because they sold the tea company the case might be different.

The principles involved in the case are of great interest to all dealers throughout the country in standard priced articles. It is the first decision under the Clayton law, which was enacted by Congress last October as a supplement to the Sherman law, in an action wherein it was sought by injunction to compel a manufacturer or marketer of any particular article of merchandise to sell that merchandise to another person, or in which it has been sought to compel a sale at prices other than set by such marketer.

The Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. had been selling Cream of Wheat in its numerous stores throughout the country. Some of these stores are called by it "Economy Stores." These stores are in charge of only one attendant, who closes the stores at such hours as he is not able to be present; no deliveries are made, and all sales are for cash. In these stores the tea company sold Cream of Wheat at 12 cents a package, which is less than the price at which the same is sold to retailers. The tea company, because of its large purchasing power, had been given the opportunity by the Cream of Wheat Co. to buy Cream of Wheat at the wholesale price of $3.95 a case in carload lots, which is about 11 cents per package, but this was only given to the tea company on condition that it agreed not to sell at less than 14 cents a package so that it would not destroy the trade of the retailer.

As soon as the Cream of Wheat Co. learned that the tea company was cutting prices and selling at 12 cents per package the Cream of Wheat Co. refused to sell any more Cream of Wheat to the tea company, and on March 13th of this year sent a notice to the trade stating that sales of Cream of Wheat to the tea company had been discontinued and asking the trade to watch with unusual care their disposals of Cream of Wheat in order that no quantity at any price should reach, directly or indirectly, the tea company.

The tea company thereupon brought its action in the United States Court in New York to procure an injunction, adjudging that the Cream of Wheat Co.'s system of sales is illegal and that it had violated the Sherman Law and the Clayton Law, and to enjoin it from enforcing what the plaintiff called a boycott or embargo against it, and from cutting off the tea company's supply of Cream of Wheat.

The Cream of Wheat Co. filed its answer to the bill of complaint and alleged that it did not have a monopoly of the commodity which it called Cream of Wheat, and that its system of selling was established for the protection of the consumer and in the public interest, to provide the quickest possible distribution and avoid storing of the product and the consequent liability of deterioration. The Cream of Wheat Co. insisted that it was necessary to the maintenance of its business that it be enabled to select its customers and to refuse to sell to those with whom it did not care to deal. It appears that when selling to wholesalers and jobbers the Cream of Wheat Co. requests them not to resell at less than $4.50 a case, which is at the rate of 12½ cents a package. It also claimed that the tea company was practicing unfair methods of competition and asked that the bill be dismissed.

This case will be of great interest to all those who sell goods at a standard price, and request jobbers and wholesalers to make resales at a fixed price, and we believe is the first decision of its kind in the Federal courts. It now reiterates the principle in connection with the Clayton Law and the Sherman Law that an owner of property has the right to select his own customers and to refuse to sell to one with whom he does not desire to do business.

Standards of Practice for Retail Merchants.

At the recent Chicago convention, the retailer's department of the Associated Advertising Clubs of America adopted certain "Standards of Practice," which any merchant may accept, wholly or in part. They ask that each retailer dedicate his best efforts to the cause of business uplift and to pledge himself:—

1. To consider, first, the interests of his customers.
2. To insist on the courteous treatment of every visitor.
3. To permit no misrepresentation.
4. To discountenance careless, slurring or offensive statements on the part of salespeople.
5. To avoid misrepresentation or careless indifference in advertising.
6. To see that comparison values in printed announcements are with prices previously prevailing in his store, unless otherwise distinctly stated.
7. To avoid the use of such expressions as "Were $10," "Value $10," "Elsewhere $10," "Made to Sell at $10," "The $10 Kind," etc., where their use would give a misleading impression to the reader.
8. To resent strenuously—to the point of withdrawal, if necessary—the "make-up" of his advertising in a newspaper next to or near announcements offensive to good taste or of a debasing nature.
9. To demand of each newspaper evidence of the approximate number of its readers (based on copies actually sold), their general location and character, and a statement as to how they were secured—by voluntary subscription, by solicitors, by premium or gifts.
10. To urge on newspapers that the same care should be shown in admitting advertising to their columns that would be shown in admitting news matter to their columns or in expressing editorial opinion there; that the newspaper should feel itself as responsible for the verity and propriety of advertising and news in its columns as for its editorials—always giving assurance that he will welcome just criticism of his own advertising.

New York Merchants' Association Excited Over Food Commissioner's Attack on Present Method of Selling Apples. The Scheme Is to Put the City in Competition With Commission Merchants. Scheme Proposed to Auction Off Surplus Canned Goods. Market Summary.

al Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, N. Y.,

July 23, 1915.

The New York Merchants' Association is up in arms over a circular from the New York State Department of Foods and Markets has been sent out to apple growers of this State, in which it practically charges the wholesale commission merchants of this city with chicanery and unfair dealing in connection with the sale of apples. The circular was called "Apple Bulletin No. 1" and was as follows:—

Apple Growers of New York State:—

You are producing a quality of apples second to none in the world; but inferior apples from other sections get the preference in both movement and prices in the New York market. When large dealers advance money on inferior apples they are not disposed to encourage the sale of your fruit, until the eastern apples are marketed and the money advanced is again in the pocket of the dealer, with the added loss.

The consumption of New York State apples is restricted in the early winter by high retail prices. This causes a sluggish market and keeps wholesale prices low. In the meantime dealers get out and buy at the low quotations from producers, and prices begin to stiffen as soon as the bulk of the fruit is out of the hands of producers.

To overcome these conditions you need an open market from one end of the season to the other to establish a price. When this price is established in New York it will also be the price for the other cities and your local sales. Every grower who sells on the ground will appreciate the value of such a quotation. The prices in New York are the prices for the whole country. You are entitled to the price apples will bring you on an open market, even sold subject to the law of supply and demand, without manipulation or prejudice. No one can ask more. No grower or shipper can be satisfied with less.

The New York State Department of Foods and Markets is making arrangements to open a free auction market in the city of New York, which will establish an open price for New York State apples for every day from October 1st to the close of the season. Every day during the season it is proposed to auction apples in the heart of the city's apple market. This will establish the price for New York State apples. No commission house will dare return less than the auction price to the shipper. There will be protests and attempts at manipulation for a short time, but ultimately all apples in the New York market will be sold at auction, and you will get more money for them.

These apples will be sold in the morning, and an account-of-sales, with check, will be on the way to the shipper before night. The auctioneer will be licensed by the department, and a representative of the State will take record of every sale. The returns will be official. For the first time in the history of the State apple shippers will be sure of a square deal in the New York market.

One of the essentials of a successful auction market is a steady supply during the season. Buyers must know that the goods will be there and that the sale will take place. To accomplish the desired results it will be necessary to have absolute control of 800 carloads of graded apples. They may be either boxed or barreled and graded under the State law. To make the market a success and get the right prices from the start, the trade must know that the supply will be regular and sure. The State will see that they are sold on the square, and that the shipper gets what the buyers pay, less the freight and the actual selling charges.

The department proposes to increase the consumption of State apples in the New York City market by canvassing the retail trade, and influencing the retailers to keep a constant supply of State apples on sale at reasonable prices and to make proper display of them. Attractive illustrated signs will be furnished the retailers to advertise New York State apples. It is believed that apples packed in cheap peck cartons, in various grades and also in ungraded varieties, would greatly increase the consumption in New York and plans are maturing to try this out during the coming season. An effort will be made to find a market for apples that have heretofore rotted on the ground. How many barrels of apples will you pledge to be sold on this plan in this open auction market?

JOHN J. DILLON,

Commissioner.

New York State Department of Foods and Markets.

The Merchants' Association has sent the following protest to the Governor of the State:—

Dear Sir:—The inclosed circular entitled, "Apple Bulletin No. 1," issued and circulated by the Department of Foods and Markets, has come to the attention of this association.

In the view of the directors, this circular reflects upon the business methods of the merchants in this city in an entirely unwarranted manner, and should not have been issued by any public official.

This association is in complete sympathy with any proper steps which will improve marketing conditions and cheapen the cost of food,

New Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act Applies to Everybody With Employees Except Housekeepers and Farmers

Covers Merchants With One Clerk as Well as Manufacturers With a Thousand. Plan Is to Make It Unnecessary for Injured Employees to Sue Employers. Under This Act They Will Receive Automatic Compensation.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has received a suggestion from A. M. Howes, secretary of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association, that a summary of the provisions of the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act be published for the benefit of the trade at large. We should have done this anyway, but have not been in any hurry about it, as the act does not become operative until the first of next January. Secretary Howes, however, says that the trade are becoming anxious on the subject, and a summary of the new law's requirements is herewith presented:—

The object of the act is to provide for the giving of compensation to employees who are injured in connection with their employers' business. The only way they can get compensation now—unless the employer gives it to them of his own free will—is to sue for it. This takes time and considerable of the amount recovered is eaten up with counsel fees.

It applies to all kinds of business establishments, large and small, manufacturing, jobbing and retail, with the exception of homes, where servants are employed, and farms, where farm hands are employed. This includes a small store with one clerk and the factory with a thousand hands.

The act applies only to accidents occurring within the State of Pennsylvania.

Under the law it is not compulsory upon either employer or employee to accept the elective compensation instead of beginning an ordinary damage suit. The employee can sue in the regular way, and if he does the employer is deprived under this act of most of the usual defenses in such cases, viz: 1. That the accident was caused by a fellow employee of the plaintiff and therefore the employer is not responsible. 2. That the employee knew all about the danger and assumed the risk of accident. 3. That the employee was guilty of contributory negligence (unless he was intoxicated or recklessly indifferent to danger). With these defenses barred, an employer would not have much chance in the average case, and this fact is expected to induce him to agree with his employees to pay for their damages for accidents without suits. The employer is further, in case of suit, made responsible for the negligence of all his employees while acting within the scope of their employment.

Even if an employee, before an accident happens, should make an agreement releasing the employer from liability, it shall not be valid and the employee can still sue for damages.

All this is intended to make it dangerous for an employer to allow himself to be sued, so that he will accept the provisions of the law for the payment of damages for all accidents happening to his employees, without suit, under a plan of fixed compensation.

Where employer and employee accept by agreement, express or implied, the elective compensation provisions, the employer upon the happening of an accident, must at once pay or arrange to pay the employee the damages which have been agreed upon. No damage need be paid where the injury or death is intentionally self-inflicted or where it comes from the intentional or wanton act of third persons. Outside of this all accidents are covered which happen to employees while engaged in the employer's business, whether on the employer's premises or not.

All contracts of employment made after December 31, 1915, and all present contracts renewed or extended, if the elective compensation provision is not to be adopted must expressly so state. A copy of such express statement must at the time be filed with the Bureau of Workmen's Compensation of the Department of Labor, Harrisburg, Pa. Where there is employment not resting on any formal contract, it will be presumed, after December 31, 1915, to be subject to the elective compensation provision unless the employer or the employee, in writing, before December 31, 1915, shall notify the Bureau to the contrary, and shall also notify the other party (i. e., the employer or the employee, as the case may be) that it is not intended that the elective compensation provisions shall apply. This applies to minors also, in which case the notice shall be given to said minor's parent or guardian.

After December 31, 1915, where an employer employs some outside person to come in upon the employer's premises and do work there, through employees, the employer is liable to the outside person's employees for accidents happening on his premises, exactly as he is liable to his own, unless the employer posts conspicuously on his premises notice that he does not intend to pay such compensation. If he does this, he must also notify the Bureau, within 10 days thereafter and before any accident has occurred.

The agreement, express or implied, between the employer and the employee, to abide by the elective compensation provisions, acts as a surrender of all right to go after damages in any other way. It will bind the employer and his personal representatives and the wife and other relatives and dependants of the employee.

Such an agreement, whether express or implied, can be terminated by either party on giving the other 60 days' notice. The Bureau must also be notified of an intent to terminate.

Where an employer contracts by an agreement with his employee, express or implied, to accept the elective compensation provisions, he must insure the payment of same by taking out insurance in the State Workmen's Insurance Fund, or in any insurance company authorized to insure such liability in Pennsylvania, unless he obtains exemptions from such insurance. Exemption is obtained by applying to the Bureau and showing such a sufficient financial condition that the need of insurance is unnecessary.

Upon failure to insure or obtain exemption within 30 days, provided, of course, that the employer is working under the elective compensation provisions, an employer shall be liable either to elective compensation or to damage in a suit at law, as the employee may elect.

The damage to be paid under elective compensation are as follows: For the first 500 weeks after the 14th day of total disability, 50 per cent. of the disabled employee's wages, but the compensation shall not exceed $10 weekly nor be less than $5 weekly, and shall not exceed $4,000 in all. An employee receiving less than $5 weekly shall receive his full wages as compensation. No payments need be made after disability ceases. Where partial disability occurs first and then total disability, the number of weeks when compensation was paid for partial disability shall be deducted from the full 500 for total disability.

Where disability is partial, the damage shall be 50 per cent. of the difference between the employee's regular wages and his wages while partially disabled, the weekly compensation shall not, however, be more than $10. No compensation for partial disability shall be paid for more than 300 weeks, this to be deducted from the 500 weeks if total disability shall follow partial disability.

Where there is permanent injury, the damages are as follows: Loss of hand, 50 per cent. of wages for 175 weeks. Loss of arm, 50 per cent. of wages for 215 weeks. Loss of foot, 50 per cent. of wages for 150 weeks. Loss of leg, 50 per cent. of wages for 215 weeks. Loss of eye, 50 per cent. of wages for 125 weeks. Loss of any two of above members, not constituting total disability, 50 per cent. of wages during the aggregate of the two periods named for those members. This compensation, however, shall not be more than $10 or less than $5 weekly.

No compensation shall be allowed for the first 14 days of disability. During those 14 days, however, the employer shall furnish reasonable surgical, medical and hospital service, medicines and supplies up to $25, unless a major surgical operation is needed, when the cost shall not exceed $75.

If the employee dies as the result of an injury which is covered by this act, the employer shall continue paying to his dependents the balance of the payments which would have been required had the employee lived.

In case of death, compensation shall be as follows: If there be no widow or widower, 25 per cent. of he employee's wages shall be paid to the children, if there shall not be more than two. If more than two, 35 per cent. of the employee's wages shall be paid, but no matter how many children there are, the maximum payment shall be 60 per cent. of the employee's wages.

To the widow or widower, if without children, 40 per cent. of wages; if with one child, 45 per cent.; if with two children, 50 per cent.; if with three children, 55 per cent.; if four or more children, 60 per cent.

If there is neither widow, widower nor children, then the employee's father or mother shall receive 20 per cent. of his or her wages. If no father or mother, the brothers and sisters, if actually dependent upon the employee, shall receive 15 per cent. of his wages if only one brother or sister, and 5 per cent. extra for each additional brother or sister, with a maximum of 25 per cent.

If there is nobody depending upon the employee, the employer shall be liable for the expense of the last illness and burial, not exceeding $100.

No compensation need be paid to a child, brother or sister of an employee, unless such person is under 16 years old; nor to a widow unless she was living with her husband when he died or was dependent on him; nor to a widower unless he cannot support himself. The liability to pay compensation ceases when the recipient dies or remarries, etc. Compensation shall not exceed $10 per week, and in case of death must be paid for 300 weeks. Where children are the beneficiaries, compensation shall be paid until they are 16 years old, even if more than 300 weeks. After 300 weeks, however, the percentage drops to 15 per cent. of the wages if one child, with 10 per cent. extra for each additional child, but with a maximum of 50 per cent.

All compensation based on wages shall be paid in installments as the wages were paid.

Alien dependents of an employee receive two-thirds of what is provided for citizens.

Employees injured by accidents must give notice to the employer within 14 days. Any employee claiming to be injured in such a way as to make the employer liable, must submit to a medical examination, if the employer requests it, by a physician which the employer provides.

Instead of continuing to pay compensation during a period of years, the entire amount to be due can be calculated by the Bureau, so that it may be paid in full at once.

but it submits that the inclosed statement brings discredit upon the city and upon the administration which is responsible for such statements.

We therefore deem it our duty to call this matter to your personal attention, in order that you may be fully aware of the situation, and may take such action as you may consider fitting.

An interesting suggestion has been made here as to relieving the market from the surplus of 1914 canned goods. There is a very large carry-over, as everybody knows, in some lines and with the 1915 pack coming on the situation is very heavy. It has been suggested that a public auction be held in this city during the period of the war at which goods which the ordinary demand will not take can be put up and sold for whatever they will bring. The plan was tried here several years ago, but did not succeed because speculators used it to manipulate the market.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet, but in good shape. Everything steady to firm.—Coffee quiet and unchanged, but the situation rather heavy. This applies to all Brazils and milds.—Sugar about unchanged. Raws slightly weaker through lack of demand. Refined unchanged. Consumptive demand fair.—Canned vegetables unchanged and in light demand.—Spot salmon somewhat firmer on lighter supply. Sardines somewhat firmer on account of shorter catch.—Provisions lower on account of decline in hogs.—Wheat is somewhat easier on account of favorable crop reports. Flour in light demand at maintained high prices, buyers taking only what they need.

Failures Still Show Increase Over Year Before.

Report for June, 1915, Show Increase in Every Line as Compared With June, 1914. In Grocery and Dry Goods Failures This Year's Liabilities Are Less Than Last Year's.

The report of mercantile failures for June is at hand, showing an increase in every line of failures as compared with June of 1914. This is the same record which all other recent months have had.

The figures are as follows:—

General Stores.—June, 1915, 153; liabilities, $896,784; June, 1914, 92; liabilities, $818,607.

Groceries.—June, 1915, 281; liabilities, $977,492; June, 1914, 196; liabilities, $1,236,795. Here the liabilities are relatively much smaller than those of June, 1914.

Clothing and Furnishing.—June, 1915, 153; liabilities, $1,229,743; June, 1914, 116; liabilities, $814,225.

Dry Goods.—June, 1915, 99; liabilities, $1,704,823; June, 1914, 72; liabilities, $40,039,959. Here too the liabilities were much greater last year, due no doubt to the heavy

Building Up Store Character

Every product of the National Biscuit Company ovens suggests goodness, freshness, cleanliness—quality. N. B. C. goods as a line suggest to customers, present and prospective, the character of the store that sells them.

These products are widely and persistently advertised. People have confidence in them because they have been proved good. Consequently, for the grocer who sells them, National Biscuit Company products are goodwill promoters—they bring trade and they hold trade.

Shoes.—June, 1915, 35; liabilities, $207,513; June, 1914, 25; liabilities, $163,858.

Hardware.—June, 1915, 44; liabilities, $502,747; June, 1914, 17; liabilities, $101,900.

What the War Did to Foreign Food Prices.

The first effect of the war was the same practically throughout Europe. Its outbreak was followed by a sharp rise in food prices, due mainly to panic and uncertainty. In some countries legislative measures were at once taken to check this rise. In others the Governments strictly adhered to a hands-off policy and trusted to the natural course of events for a readjustment. Within a fortnight the first panic was over, and, except in the actual war zone, prices began to fall. In most places, however, prices did not drop to the July level, and after an interval again took an upward turn, which has probably not yet reached its climax. Administrative and legislative measures to check the rise in cost of necessities were very generally taken. Denmark, Egypt, Great Britain, Italy, Russia, Spain and Turkey prohibited the export of practically all foodstuffs. France, Norway and Sweden listed certain articles which must not be exported, and Holland placed an embargo on butter and cheese. Some Governments, while allowing the local authorities to fix prices on most things, issued decrees applicable to their whole territory concerning a few highly important articles. Thus, Austria and Germany both prescribed the proportion of wheat or rye flour that should be used in making bread. Later, both Austria and Germany fixed the wholesale price of cereals and brought the distribution and consumption of flour and bread under strict control. Turkey fixed prices for petroleum, sugar and flour. In Italy salt, tobacco and matches are Government monopolies, so that their prices were fixed by the central authority. Denmark, Holland and Switzerland limited themselves to controlling the most important breadstuff of each country.

WITH THE EDITOR

The vagaries of advertising are many and startling, and he who sits back and quietly observes them gets many a sensation. The advertiser's ingenuity, however, seldom reaches so high a pitch as in the following, which occupied a prominent position in a current chewing tobacco advertisement:—

CHEWING TOBACCO SAVED LIVES.
HELPED SOLDIERS TO OVERCOME EFFECTS OF GASES.

London, June 4.—That chewing tobacco has literally saved lives at the front is the statement made in a letter from a corporal of the Canadian artillery to a Suffolk clergyman. "What hurt us most," he writes, "was the poisonous gas which made the air green and yellow, choking and poisoning men where they stood. Tobacco saved many lives in that battle. We began to feel choky, but put big chews in our mouths, and this caused us to expectorate the gas. Now whenever we notice the gas we chew tobacco, which greatly helps."

From which the advertiser concludes that the chewing of tobacco is a praiseworthy thing and offers his brand to the public in full confidence that they will agree with him.

Our belief is that tobacco chewing has now ceased to be even an endurable part of business or social life, but we freely admit that this advertisement has force. We merely insist that no man chew tobacco except where he is threatened with poisoning from German gases.

We reproduce elsewhere the Standards of Practice which the retailers' department of the Associated Advertising Clubs of America adopted at a recent convention in Chicago. They are all good, and perfectly honest storekeeping is not possible without observing every one. Some of them, however, particularly one, would revolutionize the methods of the biggest retail advertisers in the business:—

7. To avoid the use of such expressions as "Were $10," "Value $10," "Elsewhere $10," "Made to sell at $10," "The $10 kind," where their use would give a misleading impression to the reader.

Probably half the time these expressions are used they are used inaccurately, exaggeratedly, and often fraudulently. Where an article fairly priced at $10 is reduced to $8, of course nobody can complain where that is stated. The same is true when a merchant picks up an article which he can sell for $8, but which his competitors are regularly selling for $10. All such comparisons are legitimate, of course. But the largest advertisers distort "worth" and "value" and so on, in such a way as to make their use of these expressions plain fraud, and their excuse, when they have any, is always the same. They say the value or worth of a thing is a matter of opinion, and their opinion is that it is worth what they say it is. Opinion admittedly has a wide latitude, but there are limits to it, and the dishonest advertising laws now in force in many States fix that limit as well as anything can. The trouble is there seems to be no effort to enforce those laws.

Here is truly a novel suggestion from the "American Meat Trade Journal":—

HOW DO YOU KNOW?

It is to be supposed that you have your store kept in such good condition that its atmosphere is always sweet—a very important thing in warm weather—but how do you know it is in such condition?

You cannot tell if you are inside the store all day long, for the sense of smell soon accustoms itself to any odor, and though your store may be redolent of scraps and bones or other litter, your olfactory nerves may give no sign unless you go out and come in again after a spell in the fresh air.

All smelling stores would not long exist anywhere if their owners more often sought the outer air and thus placed themselves in the position of the customer by coming in like a customer, with the sense of smell in good condition.

There is considerable humor in the idea that a man should go out side periodically and come in for the express purpose of smelling his store like a stranger would, but it is after all nothing but common sense. Why does not the same reasoning apply to the retailer himself and to his clerks? One retail meat dealer who comes in contact with the writer occasionally, smells so of suet and bloody meat that he is offensive. There is neither good business nor good advertising in that.

An Interesting Letter

We feel so immensely proud of this letter that we have got to print it, in spite of the fact that the writer did not intend it for publication. While publishing a trade paper is primarily a money-making enterprise, there is much more in it than that, if the publisher is the right kind of a chap—there is an earnest and sincere desire, untainted by any thought of gain, to be of service. Partly because it makes a man feel better when he is of service, and partly because his enterprise will never get anywhere unless he is of service:—

Sharon, Pa., July 14, 1915.

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World,"

Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sirs:—Please discontinue the ad. which we placed in the "Subscribers' Bargain List" last week. It has been the means of bringing one who wanted to sell and one who wanted to buy together in short order.

We appreciate this "help along" service, as you call it, as well as the many good things that there are for us in the paper every week.

It is about five years since I started out for myself in the grocery business. Not long afterward I got a hold of a copy of your paper, and since that time I always look forward to its coming every Monday morning. No, I haven't made a great success, but it was not the paper's fault that I didn't. I have tried to find something in every issue of the paper that I could turn to good use; sometimes I have found it, sometimes not. And again, that was not the paper's fault. It's wonderful how much there is right around us that would be good for us if we would take it, but we don't see it.

Somehow I want to write you this letter, although I didn't intend to when I started to write. Did you ever feel like you must write someone? Well, that is the way I feel now.

Just here I want to tell you how I have admired the high moral tone of your paper. Your position on the liquor question and other matters that were just as important. You haven't "preached" about them, but you have just stood for the right of them. That helps us all. We like it.

Time and again I have felt the help you were holding out to us fellows, if we would take it. It has helped us to be better men. To be just, honest business men. Sometimes things don't go as we expect them, and we fall for a lot of censure and misunderstanding. But if we fall, we must get up and try it over again.

About 10 months ago I suffered a severe stroke of paralysis, and while I can't do much, I still like to be about the store and help (?) a little. While I never have been a big factor in the business world (and never will), I'm glad I am a business man and tried to do my little part.

As I said in the beginning, I didn't start to write a letter, so just take it for what it is worth. It's not for publication. I would that I might just let you know how you have helped just one of the many you serve.

Yours truly,

D. W. DEWEESE.

A woman writer named Margaret Lindsay says retailers are much more polite to their credit customers than they are to their cash customers:—

Appreciating Credit Customers More Than Cash Customers.

The last time I was in the city I went through the same experience in nearly all the stores I visited. The clerk was all politeness and friendliness through the entire transaction until it came time to close the transaction. Then would be asked the question, "cash or charge?" I would inform the young woman or young man that I would pay cash and this would make the temperature drop down about 50 degrees. Why is it? Do merchants not want cash trade?

It is entirely probable that you will say in answer to this that cash trade is better than the other kind. Then why the difference in treatment? Do you think you have to treat your charge customers that way in order to get the money that they already owe you? Perhaps you are correct, at that. The husband of one of the women I saw in your store yesterday owes my husband money.

There is at least one place where the cash customer is welcome—where, in fact, no other kind of customers are allowed. This is the retail mail order houses. No raising of eyebrows there when you offer your money. Only courtesy, consideration and the most strenuous efforts to please—this is what you get in the retail mail order house.

Cash trade, if you can get it and hold it on a profitable basis, is undoubtedly the best trade going, considering the business as a whole.

fact remains, however, that a credit customer will buy more and more loyally to the store than a cash customer of the same size. Not only credit customers who are financially good, and sufficient capital to carry them, and a man can do a better business and make more money than he can if he sells for cash only. The business of the department stores would shrink half if they sold only for cash; nobody realizes the business-bringing value of credit more than they do that this far Margaret Lind is right—the average retailer probably does appreciate a credit customer more than a cash customer, and he has some reason to. He is a very foolish man if he lets the cash customer see it.

Another fixed price scheme is out to be tested in the courts. It is the invention of the Ford automobile people, who have tried several other schemes of preventing cutting their cars. Every time the courts knock one out they invent another. It is the latest invention which is now before the courts, and a description of it will be interesting.

Some time ago the Ford Co. made a rule that every car sold must carry with it a bill of sale signed by one of the company's officers. The officer would of course sign only the bills of sale which covered a sale at full prices, and the Ford Co. concluded that they would thus be able to prevent any but full priced sales.

The Ford Co. removed one of its agents before he had sold all his cars. He at once cut the price on what he had left, but gave no officially signed bills of sale. The Ford Co. sued one man who bought a car from this agent, on the ground that he had no title to the car, as title could only be conveyed by a bill of sale, signed by an officer. It is said that other suits will be brought against other purchasers of cars from cutters.

In the writer's judgment this won't amount to two cents. The Ford Co. appoints an agent—for what? To sell cars, of course. It clothes the agent with authority to sell and collect the price. It is true that it authorizes him to sell at one price only, but that would not prevent title from passing, if the agent sold, delivered the car, took the buyer's money and gave him a receipt. The buyer doesn't know what the agent's secret instructions were—all he knows is that a Ford agent, authorized to sell, has sold to him.

There is another angle—the car probably belonged to the former Ford agent, and a man can do as he likes with his own, usually.

Pennsylvania News Items.

Judge Thomas P. Trimble, in the Orphans Court of Allegheny County, Pa., has handed down the opinion that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has not the right to collect the $150,000 inheritance tax which it was trying to get from the estate of the late John Arbuckle, the New York coffee dealer. Arbuckle died intestate and left an estate valued at about $3,000,000. The Commonwealth entered proceedings to collect the usual inheritance tax from this sum. The heirs of the estate contested the collection. A peculiar point has been brought up in the proceedings. Some time before Arbuckle died he entered into an agreement with John Jamison, his partner, to the effect that upon the withdrawal or death of either of the parties to the agreement from the partnership, his capital and surplus should not be withdrawn from the firm, but should remain as a deposit for a term of two years. In case of death it was to go to the estate of either decedent. While it is admitted that Arbuckle had property here, it was contended that the property automatically ceased to exist at Arbuckle's death, and that business and property revert to Jamison. The court sustained this contention and held that it prevented the Commonwealth from collecting the income tax.

Palatable Tidbits From a Winter Short Course on Retail Merchandising

Some of the Best Things From a Course of Lectures Which the Jobbers and Manufacturers of Sioux City, Iowa, Gave the Retail Trade of That Section.

I have seen salesmen lose all kinds of opportunities to sell goods because they neglected to get the goods into the hands of the customers. Not long ago I saw an incident in a store where the salesman knew his goods thoroughly. He had a kitchen utensil in his hands and was telling his story to a lady. He showed her how it worked and how it was made, and every once in a while you could see her eyes kindle and she was growing interested, and once in a while she would reach out with her hands and he would draw back. He wanted to tell her the whole thing. When he got through she walked away. She was interested but she did not get him to satisfy her interest. Her interest could not be satisfied through her eye. He should have let her have it in her hands.

In the National Cash Register Co., of Dayton, Ohio, I found they were teaching this kind of thing to their salesmen. I attended a demonstration sale about two weeks ago in St. Paul, where one of the principal department store men went to the hotel to look at some new kind of telephone arrangement. One of the chief officials of the company was there and also a young man employed by the company. This young man knew the proposition well, and on this occasion he was demonstrating the apparatus. Every time the merchant started over to see how the thing was done the young man would start before him. After the merchant went out the manager went over and asked, "Why in thunder did you not let him operate the machine?" Remember nine-tenths of the people get more through the sense of touch than through all the other senses combined. These ideas come in through the senses and when they get into the brain they make their impression there.—By Paul H.

Neystrom, who spoke on "Salesmanship."

Some manufacturers will tell you that you must carry their product because their special advertising has created a demand. When you come down to the final analysis, the retailer himself has more to do with the sale of a package than all the special advertising that was ever done. That thing was proven in Chicago, when a large number of consumers were canvassed by a number of the daily papers. As I remember it, 65 per cent. of these people bought these advertised brands because the retail grocers told them to buy them; about 30 per cent. bought them because somebody else said they were a good thing to buy; a very small per cent. bought them because they saw them advertised. This does not mean that advertising is not a good thing, but the retailer holds the key to the situation. The only trouble is that I am afraid he is sometimes just a little too lazy to turn that key.—By H. K. Zuppinger, who spoke on "Buying."

One more word about the pulling power of a town, to get people to come to your town. People will come to the town that is clean in its streets, clean in its residence district and clean in its morals. The time has gone by when a town has got to maintain a vice district or gambling joints or anything disreputable to draw trade. A town with nice clean shade trees, lawns, good business houses and nice approaches is bound to draw trade. Last summer there came up in Iowa City a very peculiar question. Some of you perhaps do not know anything about the road dragging law in the State of Iowa. We had two main streets leading into town, and just outside of the town corporation limits they were very bad. The merchants found their trade dropping off and they found it was because the farmers were coming in automobiles and they would not ride over those bumpy roads. The Commercial Club had to take hold of the matter and get those roads fixed up. So the pulling power of a town that has good roads and keeps those roads in good condition is bound to count.—By O. E. Klingaman, who spoke on "The Competitive Power of the Towns."

Plans of Federal Trade Commission.

The new Federal Trade Commission has scheduled meetings for Chicago, Detroit, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and several cities further West, beginning July 19th. While the Commission will grant hearings along any lines within its jurisdiction, it is planned to devote attention particularly to the following programme:—

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Help the New Man.—It is a serious matter landing back of a grocery counter for the first time, especially in a busy store, and a store that commands the most profitable and most desirable of following—the middle class.

Your new man is at sea for a while, new faces, new prices, new methods. Goods, to him, in out-of-the-way places, nothing seemingly at hand. Capable and all as he may be, he is apt to flounder a bit. It takes hours, days sometimes, to get one's bearings.

Be very considerate with such a man and show your brotherly spirit by aiding him in every way and by assuring him that in a couple of days he will be quite at home.

Strange as it may sound, no place will he be more at sea than taking phone orders. New voices, new names, new streets represent the hardest tasks for the new out-of-town clerk to master.

If you have ever gone through the experience yourself you will easily understand the situation. Show kindness and consideration and thus help develop one of the principles that belongs to every human being.

Report Trouble.—A lot of trouble never gets to the ears of the manager. This is wrong. It is unfair to him, unfair to the firm, unfair to you and unfair to the customer. It is wrong not to right a wrong. Adjusting trouble is unfortunately a very important part of the duties of the man higher up, and a very important factor in keeping any business running satisfactorily. If you owned the store in which you are now an employee, would you like to have a grievance "killed" and a customer lost? Think this over.

This One Is Hard to Beat.—Visiting a grocer friend a few days since the writer overheard the following: The customer was giving an order, and one of the items was flour; said she, "I want a 25-pound bag of bread flour." Said the clerk (we won't call him a salesman), "What kind do you want Pillsbury?" Oh, for a brick.

Now, the owner is a hustler and a big pusher of "Our Own" brand flour. It was anything but a Pillsbury store, or what you might call a nationally advertised goods store, otherwise the thing would not have sounded so bad. But it was bad all over.

It brings to mind what these talks have advocated again and again, when the customer doesn't specify a brand, sell your own brand, or the one that your firm wants to push. This is your opportunity to land your goods at the home and get them started.

Never commence running over a lot of brands. It is confusing, and in many cases annoying to a customer. So long as you know your favorite brand goods are absolutely reliable, don't be afraid to get them out, because if they are reliable every can and every package you sell is so much profitable advertising.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

Tea remains unchanged for the week. A good business doing, mostly in teas. Prices are steady to firm on everything and from the standpoint of the holder, the market is in line condition. The consumptive demand for tea is very fair.

Coffee.

There has been no change in the coffee market during the week. Buying is actual wants only and prices are steady. This applies to every-thing in Rio and Santos grades, also milds. The poorer grades of coffee are neglected.

Sugar.

Sugar shows no change for the week. It is incidentally where they were a week ago and so is refined, but some grades will sell granulated for 5.90. The fact that there is a good demand between for raws and refined at present, and also the large coming crop of sugar granulated, are the reasons for the decline.

Syrup and Molasses.

Corn syrup is unchanged for the week. Pound syrup is quiet, at ruling prices. Sugar syrup has advanced from 15 cents per gallon within the last week, due to the fact that the manufacturers are turning their attention to the strap, which means less sugar output. Molasses unchanged and quiet.

Fish.

The outlook for new Norway mackerel is firmer than ever on account of increased purchases by Germany. Spot Norway mackerel are unchanged for the week, but are still firm. Irish mackerel and domestic shores are not occupying important situations in the market. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and dull. Imported sardines are firm; demand good. Domestic sardines are about unchanged from a week ago, although some packers are trying to get more money, owing to the reduced catch. Some packers have named prices on new Alaska salmon on a basis about like the spot prices. Buyers appear not to be very keen. Demand good.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are about unchanged from a week ago, although some holders will still shade the market slightly. If anything, peas are a little weaker, as the supply is undoubtedly in excess of the demand. Corn is unchanged, both spot and future. Demand light. Apples are a little firmer, but not in very much demand. California canned goods, both spot and futures, are unchanged and still easy; demand light. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes seem to be gradually working up and prices, especially on futures, are a small fraction higher than a week ago. Apricots are cheap, probably cheaper than for many years past. The market is 3 cents per pound lower than a short time ago. In spite of this, the demand is very slack. All other dried fruits are unchanged and dull.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans have declined slightly during the week on account of the better supply. The demand is fair. Marrows are unchanged on the same basis that has ruled for months. Demand light. California limas show no change from a week ago. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The receipts of butter are fairly liberal and the consumptive demand is fairly normal. The weather is still exceptionally good for the production of good butter and the market is firm, unchanged and healthy. If the weather becomes warm the production will be affected and prices will probably advance.

Eggs.

The receipts of eggs continue liberal, but the demand is only moderate. The quality is fair, under the circumstances, but nothing like it was a few weeks ago.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged, with a moderate consumptive demand. The receipts are liberal, owing to the very good producing weather. There is no particular export demand, and the market is therefore dull. No important change is in sight.

Provisions.

All grades of smoked goods are steady and unchanged from a week ago. Pure lard and compound are dull, with prices about unchanged. Barrel pork is unchanged and in light demand. Dried beef and canned meats showed an improvement in demand, but no change in prices.

INDIVIDUAL-MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Imported sardines of all kinds have been in excellent demand and prices have been advanced here all along the line.

From Norway they report a fair catch of sardines, but the demand is so large that the packers are unwilling to accept the few orders except at prices to suit their own convenience. Of the cheaper grades of Norwegian sardines there is very little to be had in Norway, and stocks here are so very unimportant that they really cut no figure. This is probably a good thing, because the better grades, in fact, the finest grades of Norwegian sardines cost so very little more money than the cheaper grades, that importers will have to confine themselves to import the better grades of sardines and thereby get the trade accustomed to buying the better stuff, which would be a fortunate thing for the trade in general.

Our cables from Norway report that the catch of mackerel, which at this season of the year are used principally for canning purposes, is practically a failure, and that prices asked for those mackerel are abnormally high.

Stocks of quarter tins of Portuguese sardines are very small in this country and none to be had abroad. There has been no catch for some time, consequently these goods are quite scarce and prices have been advanced quite materially during the last week. Although the catch of sardines should be in full swing at this season of the year in France, we have had no reports from there at all, which makes us believe that there is little, if any, catch of sardines there, principally because there are no people to go out catching those sardines, being engaged now in fighting at the front instead of catching sardines.

KIRK, FOSTER & CO. WHOLESALE GROCERS 209 NORTH WATER STREET PHILADELPHIA - PENNSYLVANIA

There is a fair hand-to-mouth demand for Norway mackerel and stocks held over from last season are gradually going into consumption at somewhat better prices than have been paid a few months ago, still prices realized to-day do not cover the cost of the goods. Our cables from Ireland report shipments of only 280 barrels of Irish mackerel to the United States, which brings total shipments of 1914 Irish autumn mackerel to 20,217 barrels, and shipments of new 1915 spring mackerel of 396 barrels.

Herrings of all kinds of good quality are very scarce and fine qualities bring very good prices. Our cables report that the fishing fleet has just started from Norway to Iceland, so that the first arrivals in Norway and Denmark of new Iceland herrings may be expected about the middle of August. Of course, if the fish are not fit for export, if they are too fat, they would not arrive here in good condition, so we shall have to reckon with quite a scarcity of Norway and Iceland herrings until the weather gets quite cool.

Spices.

The market is generally firmer. Indications point to a more active market in spices, seeds and herbs, on account of the active consumption, which is now beginning.

Pepper.—Foreign markets are higher in all grades. The demand for spot goods is better. There is practically no more Aleppy or Tellicherry en route. Higher prices are probable for the balance of this month and August.

Red Peppers.—Are in better demand. Prices continue firm, with upward tendency.

Cloves.—Rather firmer and in increasing demand. There is little for sale here at current prices.

Pimento (Allspice).—Is in better demand at present prices, which are very low.

Mace.—Without quotable change. Stocks are limited and any increase in the demand will likely have a tendency to raise prices.

Nutmegs.—In fair demand at unchanged prices for all grades. Present prices we consider safe.

Green Ginger Root.—In very active demand. It is very scarce and higher prices are anticipated.

Tapiocas.—Somewhat firmer and in good trade demand. Prices are higher abroad.

Paprikas.—Hungarian is out of the market. Spanish variety unchanged and in fair demand, season considered.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Considerable activity is noticeable. Celery seed has advanced very much this week. In fact, it has been marked up 8 cents per pound. Cables from Morocco report a short crop of coriander. Caraway and poppy remain firm, but unchanged.

Standard Canned Goods.

The weather conditions throughout this section continue to be satisfactory for the growing crops of vegetables and fruits, and the proverbial fly in the ointment is conspicuous by its absence. Of course, there is the usual crop of rumors springing up, only to die aborning. For instance, reports are insistent that the growers of pears are having a world of trouble with a blight which is doing much damage to the trees and the fruit, probably cutting the crop in half. In consequence, the canners are not eager sellers of pears for future delivery. In passing, it may be truthfully said that the jobbers seem content to wait on them. As a matter of fact, the buyers are not enthusiastic on the subject of "futures" in any line of canned goods this season, and the same character of buying that prevailed during May and June continues.

Spot tomatoes were active again in lots of one to three carloads, especially for the No. 2 size, and the shipments were more widely scattered. The incentive to buy was a cut price of 45 cents a dozen for No. 2 and 65 cents for No. 3 Standards, made by two or three canners who decided to unload their holdings for quick shipment to make room for their purchases of empty cans now arriving at their factories. The No. 2s stiffened up to 47½ cents peninsula, and 50 cents for Baltimore brands, when the pressure to sell ceased. Apparently the jobbers stand ready to pick up any good things on the bargain counter. No. 3 and No. 10 tomatoes shared in the demand for prompt shipment. July and August are likely to be active months for spot tomatoes. There is no change in the situation for future tomatoes.

String beans, both green and white wax, led the demand in the other lines of vegetables, with spot and future sweet potatoes a good second. This market is full of offers for string beans at 40 cents in large lots, but they cannot be bought at that price. The canners may get back a new dollar for an old one at to-day's prices, but they are not content to work on that basis. A glance at your records will show that the opportunity to buy beans at to-day's prices seldom occurs. The canners are taking a chance of finding a profit on their sales of future sweet potatoes, and that article is well worth buyers' attention. They will be ready for shipment in September and October next, if the crop conditions are favorable. The buying of the other lines of vegetables during the week was in small quantities, except that spot corn was a little more active.

The reported shortage elsewhere in the pack of strawberries causes some additional buying here, especially of the higher grades. The blackberry crop is now on and our canners are naming low prices for excellent quality cultivated fruit. The buying of fruits was in small quantities, mostly to fill up a carload with other goods. The quotations are slightly lower for some items, blackberries, for instance. Pineapples are dull, also, though the prices for the Baltimore pack have been greatly reduced this season. There have been no sales of consequence of future peaches as yet.

The situation is unchanged as to oysters; prices are the same as last week; light buying.

Can Send Whole Crates of Fruit Through the Mails Now.

Postmaster-General Burleson has ordered that the size limit of packages for parcel post shipment be increased to a combined length and girth of 84 inches, which will permit the mailing of standard sized fruit and berry crates. The old limit was 72 inches length and girth, and there has been a widespread demand for its increase. The Postmaster-General also authorized the establishment of a receipt system of parcel post packages similar to that employed by express companies. The new regulation provides that on payment of 1 cent the postmaster at the mailing office may give the sender of an ordinary parcel of fourth class mail a receipt therefor. A postage stamp to cover the charge of the receipt will be affixed to the parcel, and the name and address of the addressee shall be written in the receipt of the sender.

BURK'S Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

321.—The "Original Package" Phase of Mail Order Competition.

Probably every reader of these articles is up against mail-order competition in some form or other, some from the big Chicago concerns which sell to consumers through catalogues entirely, some from the cash wholesale houses that do the same to retailers, and some from that other form of semi mail-order concern which has agents in the towns—almost never in the large cities—to take orders for goods which are then shipped to the customer from the headquarters of the house. Everybody who is bitten by this kind of competition wishes that in some way the outside concerns could be taxed or licensed, and there have been many attempts made to tax them, but few have amounted to anything. A decision recently handed down by the United States Supreme Court may afford a better chance to get after the non-resident concerns with licenses or taxes. The decision defined an original package, and although it did not change the law, it made it a little clearer than it was before. The importance of the original package question is this: Goods shipped from one State to another are interstate commerce, and in most cases are subject only to Federal (National) laws. A State law may not interfere with them, or tax the person selling them—provided they remain in the original package. When the original package is broken and the contents taken out, the protection of interstate commerce is gone and the State law takes control.

The following letter from an Iowa reader brings the whole subject up:—

We are greatly plagued by the competition of a Chicago concern which has appointed a lot of agents in our territory for the purpose of selling consumers. These agents carry no stock and in many cases have no offices. They do not carry samples as a rule, although in some cases they have done so. Orders are sent on to Chicago and are filled from there, the goods being sent in a lump to the agent, who distributes them to customers. The agents have always claimed they cannot be taxed by our State laws, because the goods are interstate commerce, and our borough solicitor has advised us not to attempt to do anything. Sometimes goods are shipped direct to the customer from Chicago, but as a rule they are shipped in a big case to the agent. He takes them out and delivers them around. Is there any protection for the local merchant against this?

On the facts as here presented, I should think there was. The crux of the case is the original package. Suppose that I, being a resident of Pennsylvania, go out to solicit orders for baking powder, or extracts, or anything else, from among the consumers in my territory, my orders to be filled by a New York house, which ships the goods into Pennsylvania. Whether they are interstate commerce—or perhaps more accurately whether they remain interstate commerce, depends on how they are shipped. If a dozen bottles of extract are shipped in an original package direct from the New York house to my customer, the package of a dozen is an original package, it is interstate commerce, and no Pennsylvania law has any control over it at all. Nor can the State of Pennsylvania, nor the city of Philadelphia, nor any other Pennsylvania towns into which I go for orders, tax me or make me pay a license. I am dealing in interstate commerce only, and answerable only to the Federal laws.

But if the New York house ships me the dozen bottles of extract, with instructions to open it and deliver six bottles to one customer, three to another and three to another, the package of a dozen is an original package and is interstate commerce only until it reaches me. The minute I break it, those goods become blended with the mass of other goods within the State, and are no longer interstate commerce. If I take them around and deliver them, I am doing business in a way which will entitle the city or town or borough, to tax me, and which will also entitle the Pennsylvania State law to censor the quality of the goods I am dispensing.

In other words, an original package—and this is the substance of the most recent Supreme Court decision—is the outside case. As long as that remains unbroken, the goods are free from interference by the State law. So is the man who sold them, which includes the local agent. The packages inside the case, while in a non-legal sense they might also be considered original packages, are not legal original packages.

This is the way the big Chicago mail-order houses have been able to build up a business running into millions of dollars every year and extending into tens of thousands of towns and cities, without having to pay a cent of tax anywhere. They always ship their packages direct to the buyer and never to an agent, at least never to an agent to be broken. Of course an original package can be shipped to an agent, and if he takes it intact to the buyer it is still an original package and is protected as much as if sent to the buyer in the first place.

Question: C. C. Travis, Windsor, N. Y.—Tell us through your Legal Department whether a copartnership holds each individual liable in case of the failure of one of the partners in a business outside of the copartnership.

Answer.—If A and B are partners in a retail grocery business, and at the same time B and C are partners in a hotel business, and the hotel business fails, how does it affect A and the retail grocery business? That is as I understand your question. The answer is that B's creditors in the hotel business can seize and sell his interest in the grocery business, but A is not personally affected at all. Under some circumstances, it might be necessary to wind up the grocery business in order to fix and dispose of B's interest, but this would not be the case always.

Question: R. O. Morehouse, Cleveland, Ohio.—Please advise if the manufacture of colored oleo is prohibited by law in this State. Also if colored oleo can be delivered in the State if not manufactured here.

Answer.—The manufacture of oleomargarine which is colored with artificial coloring is absolutely prohibited in Ohio, as follows:—

Section 12,733. Whoever manufactures oleomargarine which contains methyl, orange, butter-yellow, annatto, aniline dyes or other coloring matter, shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, and, for each subsequent offense, in addition to the above fine, may be imprisoned not more than 90 days. (91 v. 274, 275 secs. 1, 5.)

Butter containing large amount of natural coloring, such as that produced in the month of June, sometimes added in certain proportions to uncolored oleomargarine thereby giving it a light yellow tinge. This is not prohibited by Ohio statutes.

No. 2.—Section 12,734 General Code absolutely prohibits the sale or delivery of oleomargarine colored with artificial coloring matter as follows:—

Whoever, not being a manufacturer thereof, offers or exposes for sale, sells or delivers, or has in his possession with intent to sell or deliver oleomargarine which contains methyl-orange, butter-yellow, annatto, aniline dyes or other coloring matter, shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $100 dollars. (91 v. 274, 275 secs. 1, 5.)

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office no later than Tuesday of each week, to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD

Down With the Croakers.

Here's something I keep under my hat and try to think about every little while: If you can't say a good word don't say any. That means about everything—your friends, your wife, your competitors, and more than anything, about business. Me, I'd like to sweep all the croakers into a big bunch, tie a string around their little brown necks and toss 'em over somewhere where they'd never bother us try-to-be-hopeful fellows again.

It's hard enough to do business nowadays if you're let alone, but when you have to talk down a lot of dismal croaks that other fellows have gone ahead of you and planted, it's pretty blamed hard.

I was going around as usual the other day, trying to gather in a few orders for the best line of goods on earth. I had a clean collar on and was feeling pretty snuffy. I even busted out into a little song as I left the hotel, and when I bust out into song things are all right, believe me—for them what don't hear me, I may say.

The very first man I called on poured a gallon of ice water down my neck that honest ain't dried out yet. He's a regular customer—has bought goods of me for years. He's a sort of human barometer—ain't that what tells the weather?—if he's feeling good he'll open up and buy real generous. When he ain't feeling good he gives you orders you could stick in a flea's eye without making him blink.

So when I go in there I'm Little Sunshine; that's only common horse sense.

When I went in that morning I had on the smile that you couldn't even sandpaper off, but it didn't melt any ice with him. He was plumb blue, I saw that right away.

"I don't believe I want a thing in your line," he said. "Business is very bad; there's a feeling of unrest. A whole lot of people are out of work and until this war is settled we'll all have to lay low. I find there seems to be a good deal of fear about the situation."

That's what I got in place of an order that ought to have been $500 anyway.

"I'll bet a big apple Bill Young's been in here," I said, suspiciously.

"Why yes, he has—not fifteen minutes ago," he said.

"Sure! I knew he had by the color of that dope you're handing me. Darn that old calamity howler, why don't he go talk to the weather man!"

"Bill watches conditions pretty close," he said.

"Bosh!" I said, "Bill's been constipated for thirty years and his own wife looks blue to him. He can't see a grain of hope in anything. I wouldn't care a blame if he'd only keep his feelings to himself! What right's he got to come in here and get you all bilious and spoil my business! Listen here! Bill will probably see every man I'm going to see to-day, before I do, and I'll gamble that my orders'll fall off 50 per cent. just on that account. He'll smear yellow over everything and scare everybody to death! It ain't right—he hadn't ought to do it!"

"I'm sure he didn't affect me," said the boss. "I——"

"You tell that to Li Hung Chang!" I said. "I know he did! That kind of dope affects anybody."

"Well, how do you find general conditions?" he said.

"General conditions are all right as far as I can see," I said. "But I don't care a blame what they are. All I want to know is, how's conditions in my line. They're as fine as silk. You oughtn't to care any more about general conditions than I do. What do you care if the Steel Trust don't pay a dividend or the railroads ain't buying steel rails?"

Is that going to make the people here eat any less of your stuff?"

"I don't know about that."

"Well, I know about it, and I say it ain't. We can settle this in two seconds. How is your business? You forget all that slush Bill Young handed you and just tell me how your business is?"

"Well—I don't know as I can complain," he said, "June was ahead of last February by about 12 per cent."

"Well, then why in thunder do you listen to Bill Young's croaks!" I said. "Why don't you——"

"Don't talk so loud, will you?" he said, "I don't want to make the town think there's a fire here."

"I have to talk loud; it's a case for talking loud! The idea of your doing your buying from what Bill Young says about 'general conditions,' when your conditions are as fine as silk! By gravy, but it gets me plumb wild! Here, gimme the order before I bite me own leg!"

D'ye know, hope I may die if even after that he didn't cut it down pretty near half. But if I hadn't waded in and talked loud, as he

This window will look cool if the color scheme is simply light and dark green. First cover the bottom of the window with dark green crepe paper and then measure a piece of light green crepe paper the length and about three-fourths the width of the window. Cut scallops all along the edge of this and lay it on top of the darker shade. Place cord around the edge of the scallops. In the center of this place on a linen napkin a plate of Nabisco and ladyfingers and a glass of root beer. Fill the glass nearly to the top and then cut a round piece of pasteboard to fit over the top of the glass, and on top of this put some cotton to represent froth—pull it out well so that it will look natural. Make several pyramids of the different brands of the extracts and then run a width of the dark green crepe paper across the rear and a width of the light over that and letter like illustration.

d, I wouldn't have got anything Bill Young had killed the business.

And here's the point that gets my hat—he killed his own too. These bakers never seem to see that. Understand, they ain't meaning to anybody's business—they're honest all right in what they say, but they're blind—blind as bats. I ain't going to lie to anybody about my business. If it's rotten I ain't going to say it's good. But if I can't say it's good and tell the truth, I'll be dadburned if I'll own it's rotten.

Department Again Warns Celery Growers Against Excessive Use of Copper.

Florida Celery Found in Market Bearing Too Much Copper, Which Comes From Improper Use of Spray in Order to Prevent Blight. Advises Thorough Scrubbing of Celery Before Eating.

Washington, D. C., July 22, 1915.

An investigation of a number of complaints received by the Department of Agriculture indicates that many Florida celery growers are being careless in spraying their celery, and that as a result quantities of copper in excess of what is believed necessary or healthful have been found on the celery when ready for consumption. The use of salts of copper in food products has been officially pronounced injurious to health, and in previous seasons the Department has warned growers of the necessity of their complying with this decision. The department has issued another warning.

The copper is deposited on the celery in the form of dried Bordeaux mixture (lime and copper phosphate), which is used extensively to prevent the destruction of the crop by blight. Unless the plants are sprayed at certain periods of growth with this mixture, it has been found impossible to bring them to market in good condition. That growers have not been careful enough in the use of their spraying apparatus is indicated by the fact that the Department of Agriculture has found as much as 34.9 parts of copper per million on washed inner stalks. In other cases the proportion has run as high as 17.4, 13.0 and 11.3 parts per million. On the other hand, in many of the specimens examined, it was found that copper was not present in undue amounts, which emphasizes the point that care in spraying is all that is necessary.

As a matter of fact, if bunches of celery are broken up and the stalks thoroughly scrubbed before being eaten, practically all the copper from the Bordeaux mixture will be eliminated and there will be no danger of bad effects to the consumer. It is recommended, therefore, that this practice be followed wherever there is any reason to suspect from the color of the celery or otherwise that copper has been allowed to accumulate upon the stalks.

Workings of Co-operative Delivery in a Western City.

The Co-operative Delivery System which was recently installed in Bellingham, Wash., began delivering goods the 17th of May, and while it has been in operation only a little over two months, all the firms participating in the service are very well pleased with it and many more are seriously contemplating the early adoption of the system. At present the company is doing the delivering for 13 firms and are using only eight wagons. The same equipment could handle one-third more business very easily. Deliveries are made four times each day and five on Saturday, and merchants are not allowed to hold up the deliveries for delayed orders. Everything is delivered on time and the customers can tell within a very few minutes of what time the orders will be delivered, which is a decided improvement over the old system of delivering. In order that the goods be delivered when desired the customers are learning to order as per the schedule given them for their district, which is a means of putting system in the merchant's store by putting system in the customer's way of ordering. Another strong feature of the system is the method of collecting for C. O. D. orders. Nothing is trusted to memory. By the use of a tag the merchant has a receipt for the order and knows he will either get the money or the goods returned promptly.

J. P. FORBES, ^{Forbes} Building, Coshocton, Ohio

Mr. L. W. Burkhardt, who owns and operates the Pioneer Grocery, of West Palm Beach, sends me a copy of a large crushed peach colored circular 8 x 23½ inches, which he says is a "copy of a half page ad. in local paper. As everywhere, we are up against the cut rate proposition." Here is the much reduced reproduction:—

The

Pioneer Grocery

is not

A CUT RATE Grocery Store

BUT—

The Pioneer Grocery is first of all a Quality Store, catering to particular people who want the best for their table. It is in a position to sell the goods it carries as cheaply as any store in the city, and assures its patrons that no store, termed "Cut Rate," or otherwise, will be allowed to undersell it.

It guarantees to duplicate any published price-list that you may bring to us, with Quality for Quality — Cleanliness, Service and Satisfaction included.

If you have a credit rating, or a reputation for paying your bills promptly, it will never insult you by demanding your money before you are served.

Pioneer Grocery

decidedly more force. Instead of saying "The Pioneer Grocery is not a cut rate grocery store," I think more people would have read it with interest if you had said: "We will meet any price-list you bring here." Certainly to the average person this is more appealing than a statement which appears to mean that you will not cut prices at all.

Or if you want to play up the fact that you don't ask for cash, you could have made a heading of that. "We Don't Insult You By Doubling That You Pay Your Bills," or some shorter modification of that, would have attracted more attention. As a matter of fact, according to the way I look at it, you have used an idea in your heading which is calculated to repel people rather than attract them. The fact is that people are looking for cut rate stores to-day. They may deny it, but it is nevertheless true, and you can always arouse more interest by saying "this is a cut rate store" than by saying "this is not a cut rate store."

If you have ever been called to meet the prices of a published price-list, you can make some fine advertising out of it, by playing up the incident. "This is the Way We Meet Competitors' Prices," and so on.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Dry Goods Business Normal.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods has maintained about the same volume as during the corresponding week of a year ago.

The attendance of merchants in the market has been large, indicating a lively interest in merchandise for warm weather retailing.

Extensive preparations are well under way for Chicago Market Week and Style Show, August 2d to 7th inclusive, and it is expected that an unusual number of merchants will visit Chicago during the week.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Friends of E. W. Heffner, ex-president of the Pennsylvania Pharmaceutical Association and a member of the Lock Haven Business Men's Association, are urging him to be a candidate for the place on the Public Service Commission left vacant by the refusal of Congressman Kiess to serve. Mr. Heffner would make an ideal member of the Commission; he is a successful business man and a man of affairs, and incidentally his appointment would be a splendid recognition of the retail merchants of the State.

The Business Men's Association of Danville is arranging for a "Dollar Sale" day early in August.

The East Stroudsburg Association is progressing finely. Mr. Smedley visited this Association on July 12th and notwithstanding the extreme heat there was a good attendance.

Mr. Smedley's talk was on "Credits," and a plan was outlined and will be put in operation that will protect the merchant in opening accounts and make the delinquent debtors sit up and take notice.

Cresson merchants are becoming much interested in greater organization and plans are being made for a real constructive and useful association.

Merchants of Royersford appointed committee of three to endeavor to organize an association. Mr. Smedley has proffered his services.

The Hazelton Chamber of Commerce has arranged to have its members refuse contributions to church and lodge fairs, to turn down ticket sellers and wage war on beggars and solicitors.

Elizabethtown merchants have a good organization.

Mr. Smedley visited the Manheim Business Men's League on July 15th. It was a rally meeting. Merchants have been invited from Elizabethtown, Manheim, Joy, Ephrata and Lititz. The meeting was held in the new school building Auditorium and was attended by about 150 merchants with their wives. President Horace Martin introduced the speaker after Mr. Smedley's address. Short talks were made by Messrs. Zor Bushong and Pfantz, of Lititz, and Professor Heigis, of the Manheim High School.

Manheim is a live, hustling town and its merchants are wideawake and enterprising. On the committee to arrange for the meeting were Elmer Beck, Harry Danner, N. W. Snikleton and H. Trout.

Somehow this advertisement doesn't seem very convincing to me. Haven't you killed the thing in the very beginning when you said "The Pioneer is not a cut rate store." In the first place, is that true, considering that you will meet any price put up to you through a published price-list? Even if it is true, it doesn't seem good advertising policy to say so in such a blunt fashion. I think the scheme which Mr. Burkhardt is trying to put over here could have been presented with D'ye Know, You Haven't Got So Much Time on the $175 Window Dressing Contest?

It closes September 1st next, which is only five weeks off. Realize that?

Do you understand that we are going to give away One Hundred and Seventy-five Dollars in prizes for the best window displays of Lipton's Tea? There are two strong reasons why you should make a Lipton Tea display now—1, they're doing a lot of advertising to your customers, and a display will yoke you up with it; and 2, it's the iced tea season. These reasons would be big enough without the $175.

Here are the terms and conditions:—

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes September 1, 1915.

How to Make Other Cocos as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

More Questions Which American Grocers Who Consider Themselves Well Informed Can Ask Themselves

They Comprised the National Examination Questions of the English Institute of Certificated Grocers. Particularly Read the Questions on Methods of Advertising.

Several weeks ago we published another set of the English grocery examination questions, which a candidate for a diploma from the Institute of Certificated Grocers must first pass. Those were the questions asked in the local examinations. Below we reproduce the questions asked in the recent (June) National examinations:—

Mail Order Grocery Prices Compared With Regular Prices.

A Western farmer who had a bill of groceries for harvest time all ready to mail in to a mail order house at Kansas City, dropped in at a local grocery to compare prices. To his surprise he found that he could save $3.60 on the bill by buying it of the local grocer instead of sending to the mail order house. Here is the bill he was about to send to the Kansas City house—Montgomery Ward & Co.—and the price he paid for the duplicate order at the local grocery:—

Subsidizing Salesmen and Taking Unearned Cash Discounts Two Prime Evils of the Trade

National Wholesale Grocers' Association Issues Statement on Both. Believes Nobody Should Allow His Salesmen to Be Hired by Outsiders to Push Special Goods, or Take Discounts Which Are Not Earned.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association has issued pronouncements to jobbers on two important questions of the trade: (1) allowing manufacturers to subsidize jobbers' salesmen to push particular goods to retailers, and (2) taking cash discounts after the discount period has expired. The National Association's views on these subjects are worthy of reproduction:—

SUBSIDIZING SALESMEN.

The policy of subsidizing salesmen is wrong in principle. It is a form of bribery that tends to demoralize the sales force and destroys that confidence between manufacturers and distributors which is the foundation for fair trading. It violates one of the "objects" of this association, and opens the way to flagrant abuses. It should be discouraged and can be eliminated entirely by the wholesale grocers themselves.

Don't furnish the names of your salesmen to any manufacturer. Instruct your office force accordingly. The evil of the subsidizing practice may not appear as harmful as it really is, yet how few principals in the wholesale grocery business know that the names of their salesmen have been furnished to manufacturers by department men, who may be interested with the salesmen in a division of the subsidy or bribe. How seldom, if ever, is a subsidy offered on a free seller in which your capital is invested, and for which a demand is created? Subsidies are usually offered on a new article or one on which the manufacturer wants to make a "drive," as it were, and in subsidizing your salesmen, improper methods are employed and illegitimate practices are introduced. No manufacturer should be privileged to bribe your salesmen, and thereby undermine your selling organization, and no manufacturer will do so without your consent?

If the subsidizing practice is to be ended, the individual jobber must be alive to the evil and correct it, before some manufacturers have more control over his sales force than the employer has who pays the salaries and supplies the capital invested.

DISCOUNT FOR CASH.

If trade is to be carried on upon "lawful and proper lines," honor must be the keystone of business. Evils in the trade are being eliminated, yet, now and again we are reminded that the "Discount for Cash" privilege is abused by some wholesale grocers. A discount for cash is nothing more nor less than a reward for prompt payment within a specified time and no wholesale grocer should expect the discount if he has violated the terms of purchase. The rule of action is that every unit should do its duty, otherwise trouble ensues. The individual cannot ignore the rights of others without injury to all and with greatest harm to himself.

Laxness in observing the discount for cash limit may be due to thoughtlessness, or improper instruction to the bookkeeping department of your business. The discount for cash may seem a matter of trifling importance because the amount involved in the transaction is small, yet a manufacturer trading with several thousand wholesale grocers who are entitled to a discount for cash under certain and positive conditions, would soon find himself seriously handicapped if these wholesale grocers abused the privilege offered. Don't expect a discount for cash unless you are entitled to it under the terms of sale of the manufacturer.

Let the accountants of a firm be held to a rigid system, by paying the invoice within the time limit of the discount for cash allowance, and not tender payment after the time limit has expired, and then find fault with a manufacturer who may criticize a violation of his selling terms.

There are splendid possibilities in the discount for cash system for both manufacturers and distributors if the privilege and its real meaning are respected by all wholesale grocers.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The big event of the week was the picnic of the Pittsburgh Grocers' Union at West View Park on July 21st. Just how many thousands were there would be hard to estimate. They came in crowds until the park could hold no more. There was a big programme of sports, free lunch and a chance for every one to win a new Ford five-passenger automobile. Visitors were there from all the surrounding towns. Organizer Smedley spent part of the day with them. It was one of the best-conducted affairs of the season. Clean fun, ideal weather, splendid arrangements for comfort and samples galore. The manufacturers gave away enough stuff to satisfy even the most energetic sample gatherer. The following Executive Committee had charge of the day: D. E. Durbin, C. A. Bell, H. Studt, B. Buesker, Fred. C. Mahler, Wm. Harbison, Chas. Wachter, W. H. Shaeffer and H. F. Donnelly. These gentlemen were assisted by about 150 of the membership.

The Pittsburgh grocers will now have a paper that will be the official mouthpiece of the organization. Its title will be the "Pittsburgh Grocer and Merchant."

The Pittsburgh Butchers' Association will picnic at Idelwild Park on July 28th. A big crowd is expected.

Wilkesburg grocers are arranging to form an association.

The Wilmington Grocers' Association conducted a successful excursion to Atlantic City on July 22d.

E. J. Spangler, one of the wheel horses of the State Association, died on July 20th at his home in Pittsburgh and was buried at Berlin, Pa., on July 23d. Mr. Spangler was a hard and conscientious worker for the cause of organization and he assisted in forming a number of associations.

The Royersford merchants have organized an association, with James B. Richart as president. Mr. Smedley has received an invitation to address the association in August.

The Pottstown Association will picnic on August 5th. It will be a big event. It is expected that Governor Brumbaugh will be the guest of honor.

Thursday, July 29th, was celebrated as Commerce Building Day at Erie. The event celebrated the opening of the new quarters of the Erie Commercial Club and was attended by thousands of the citizens of Erie. The climax of the day was reached when a young couple were married on the roof. Arrangements have been made to start the couple in housekeeping.

Punxsutawney Association has added 17 new members to the roll since the date of the rally meeting. The association conducted a successful "Independence Day" celebration on July 5th.

Erie grocers held a successful outing at Four-Mile Creek Park on July 21st.

The Meadville Association is about to inaugurate a co-operative delivery system.

The New Castle Grocers' Association held a picnic at Cascade Park on July 21st. This was the 15th annual event. It was a day of merrymaking and re- enjoyment.

Grocers of the East End (Pittsburgh) gave an outing to their customers at Idelwild Park on July 14th. It was a big success.

The Berwick Business Men's Association will picnic at Fairchild's Park on August 11th. It will be a big event. Everything is to be free, even the transportation. There will be sports of all kinds and it is expected that one of the results will be to more closely link the merchant and his customer. The Berwick Association is adding to its membership at each meeting.

On July 22d there was a meeting of the local Convention Committee of the Meadville Association at Conneaut Lake, consisting of C. L. Shaw, F. J.

Adams Express Co. Recalls Larkin Deal

Opposition to Trade So Heavy That Company Issues Statement That Scheme Is Off. Plan Was to Have Been Worked All Over Country.

In a recent issue it was stated that the Adams Express Co. had entered into a working agreement with the Larkin Co. whereby the express company should push Larkin goods among its employees. The advantage to the express company was in the large added amount of express business which it expected the shipment of the Larkin goods would produce.

The idea emanated from the Bureau of Order and Food Products in Philadelphia and was first put on in the West, being intended for extension all over the country if successful there.

The whole scheme has now collapsed and been withdrawn. The Western trade rose en masse against it and the company during the week has issued the following statement:—

Recently, our company has been distributing circulars, advertising for sale, products of certain Eastern concerns. These circulars were issued by Mr. Tunis, Chief Industrial Agent of our company at Philadelphia, Pa.

I beg to advise you that all of these circulars have now been withdrawn by the Adams Express Co. and no further distribution will be permitted.

Had the scheme been persisted in undoubtedly reprisals would have been undertaken by the trade. Both the organized wholesale and retail trade of Philadelphia was preparing to appoint committees to call on the local manager of the Bureau of Order and Food Products to protest, and other ways of enforcing trade opposition would have been adopted. The most outrageous part of the scheme was that the Adams Co. was practically forcing its employees to buy Larkin stuff.

Penalt, S. P. Schieck; Messrs. Graham, Cahan and Phyrock and Mrs. Long- accompanied the committee. In addition there was present E. O. Spotts, President State Secretaries' Association; M. Howes, Theodore Landsberg and William Smedley. Plans were gone into in detail and the programme practically completed.

The Berwick Association has appointed a committee to request City Councils to provide more hitching posts for farmers' teams coming into the town.

There's something to think about. The towns of Cannonsburg and Washington have long been business rivals. It has been competition and not co-operation. On July 20th 100 business men of the two towns burned an effigy of "Viscious Competition." The "Effigy of Competition" was inclosed in an old wooden coffin and was borne by four pall bearers, Frank Hayes, Harry McNeily, I. R. Burke and W. P. Wilson, all of Washington. The funeral procession after reaching Cannonsburg marched through the principal streets of the town to the High School, where in the presence of a large crowd the eulogy was delivered by Geo. McCackey.

The coffin was then carried to the center of the town and burned, while the business men of the two towns sang songs of thanksgiving. In a mass meeting at the High School business men traded for a heartier spirit of co-operation in business affairs and more efficient handling of district business. The trip to Cannonsburg was the first in a series to towns in Washington County by members of the local Board of Trade.

Exposition Park, where the convention will be held, is a charming place, situated on the western shore of Conneaut Lake, the largest body of water in the State of Pennsylvania, 107 miles north of Pittsburgh and 45 miles south of Erie. It is 700 feet higher than Lake Erie, amidst beautiful hills and pure, refreshing air. There are numerous splendid hotels, chief among them being the Conneaut and Virginia. The convention was never held in a more delightful place. Amusements galore, fishing, sailing, boating and splendid roads for automobiling. Everything that can be done will be done to give visitors a pleasant time. Arrange to go to the convention—the programme is a helpful and interesting one.

Conneaut Lake is near Meadville—the home of the first typewriter, the place from whence was shipped the first steam engine installed in Siam, the home of the Spirella corset and many other famous products. There will be lots of time for sight seeing.

WITH THE EDITOR

One of the eternal mysteries of the food manufacturing business is how tomato packers can go on selling their product below the cost of production year after year. The Cost Accounting Committee of the National Canners' Association supply the following figures showing estimated cost of producing No. 3s for 1915:—

	Per Case.
Cans at $15.53 per 1,000.....	.3727
Cases115
Freight on cans and cases...	.02
Solder hemmed caps at $1.60 per 1,0000384
Tipping solder0045
Tomatoes at $8 per ton.....	.40
Packing house labor and peeling225
Labeling, loading and unloading canned goods and cases025
Interest (including plant)...	.035
Insurance (including plant)...	.03
Labels025
Coal, gas and acid025
Leaks, swells and rusties....	.01
General freight, express and incidentals015
Brokerage, commission, discount, taxes, maintenance and repair and depreciation of plant1042
Net cost per case.....	2) 1.448
Net cost per dozen7224

All the packers, not only the small ignorant unsystematic fellows, but the large and progressive houses as well, are now taking future orders at 67½ to 70 cents, which are several cents a dozen below actual cost of production! And they have been doing it year after year! Our memory may be faulty, but to the best of our recollection, there has hardly been a time within the last five years—certainly not within the last three—when the alleged producing cost has not been more than the selling price. The 1914 cost was about the same as the 1915, yet 1914 tomatoes are now freely selling at 65 to 67½ cents after being carried for nearly a year. How do they do it?

Of course the suit against the Cream of Wheat Co. collapsed almost before it began — everybody except the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. expected it to, and we cannot believe that even the counsel for that company advised it that its suit had any chance of success.

The collapse of the suit was reported last week. The Cream of Wheat Co. refused to sell the tea company because it cut prices and requested its customers not to sell it either. The tea company brought suit on the theory that the Cream of Wheat Co. was setting up a monopoly when it refused to sell a would-be customer and influenced others to refuse also.

The court instantly made the obvious answer that the Cream of Wheat Co. had the right to a monopoly of a trade-marked article, one feature of which monopoly was the right to choose its own customers. There was really no more to the case than this. The tea company asked the court to force the Cream of Wheat Co. to sell its exclusive product to somebody that the Cream of Wheat Co. had decided that it did not want to sell to, and the court declined to do it and said it had no power to do it.

Of course it hadn't.

Dr. Charles H. Lawall, the Pennsylvania State chemist, recently read before the Pennsylvania Pharmaceutical Association a paper on "What is Rice Powder?" It proves the truth of what we have often contended: that manufacturers and merchants in other lines are permitted to conduct their business much more loosely than the manufacturer and merchant in food products. We do not contend that the latter's business should not be restricted; we are arguing for an extension of similar restrictions to others.

Read this:—

Not one of the users of the product knows or realizes that for years the greater proportion of brands of toilet powder either labeled directly as rice powder or in a manner implying the presence of rice as a preponderating constituent, contain but a small proportion of rice, and many of them contain none at all.

In other words, in the manufacture of rice powders, fraud is the rule and honesty the exception.

And there is no law on the statute books to prevent it.

The following letter will be of keen interest both to retailers and wholesalers:—

Philadelphia, Pa., July 28, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have been much interested in the weekly talks under the heading, "Give Your Jobber a Square Deal," etc. There is much truth in what is set forth there, but there is nevertheless something to be said on the other side. I will relate an experience which I recently had with a wholesale grocer—one of those whose names appear signed to the advertisements in question. Recently a manufacturer's missionary salesman came to me and got my order for a certain brand of canned tuna fish, to be shipped through my jobber. The jobber, without explanation, sent me another brand. I was forced to take it because I was selling tuna fish right along and could not afford to wait while the matter was straightened out. I therefore was put in the position of being compelled to sell what I had not ordered, and did not wish to sell. My customers took the brand he sent, and apparently were satisfied with it, but that was only because they do not order as yet by the name of any special brand. My order was not filled. Is this the square deal that the jobbers are talking about?

Yours,
F.

We think this correspondent is scarcely citing a parallel case. The square deal which the jobbers are preaching concerns matters of honor, while the case he cites concerns a matter of gall. Of course a buyer has a right to have his order filled as given, and if an attempt is made to fill it with something else, he can refuse the substitute. We suppose it is also within the right of any seller, wholesale or retail, who has not in stock goods that were ordered, to try and sell something else in their place, provided he makes no false representation that the substitute is the original. He cannot get away with it.

Dear Sirs:—

I feel that the following facts are worth investigating and given a place in your paper:—

The Maple-Flakes people charge the Grocers $2.60 for their Corn Flakes and go around to the Hospitals and Institutions and sell them the same goods direct at $1.50 per case of three dozen.

This is manifestly so unfair it seems as though their methods should be exposed so all Grocers may know how they are doing business. There is no question about this being true.

Yours truly,

less the buyer wants him to. Everything is perfectly open. There is an instantaneous and inflexible way of stopping substitution: refuse to accept the substitute. Do that once or twice and the dealer will soon begin to say: "Don't sell that man anything but what he wants—we'll only have the trouble of bringing it back." As long as customers accept substitutes there will be substitution, and we suggest to the buyer who accepts the substitute when he could reject it, is more to blame than the seller who he tries it on.

Why couldn't this correspondent have made his jobber take the substitute back? He writes from Philadelphia, and the jobber was presumably in Philadelphia. Both doubtless have telephones, and it would seem to be only the matter of a few hours to get the mistake corrected, especially if the buyer had vigorously enough upon his points. At any rate, whether it was convenient or not, if a buyer is willing to make a slight sacrifice of convenience once or twice, he has a complete remedy right in his own hands.

The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

A Wholesaler's Advice to Retailers.

To Avoid Destruction by Chain Stores, Be Modern, Watch Conditions and Make Opportunities. Not Spasmodically, But Regularly. A Canned Pea Bargain as an Illustration.

One day last week a wholesale grocery salesman wrote in to his house complaining that he saw among his own customers at least, no evidence that business was improving. The house sent the following reply, which contains strong food for thought:—

In regard to your customers getting new business, or feeling the effects of the boom, which is now being enjoyed by a great number of manufacturing towns, you can be a great benefactor to your customers if you can persuade them to be more modern in their business, that is to say, sell goods at lower prices and move them quickly. The trouble with old-time retail grocers is, they sell at about the same prices, no matter what the goods cost, or how long they keep them, or how the market goes, consequently their stocks get old, shop-worn and unattractive, which will hardly keep an old customer, and certainly will get no new. We venture to say that if a storekeeper is alive to the times, puts out circulars or placards making special low prices, he would do more business, and consequently make more money in the long run. Take the Alaska peas which we offer in five-case lots at 57½ cents; if a man would make a run on them at 6 or 7 cents a can, he could not help doing some business. But it has to be followed with other goods continually and not spasmodically, and after while they will get such trade that they will hardly know what dull times are. Wish you would try it on some of the men you know best. If the retail grocers generally do not adopt measures of this kind, all the retail dealers in a few years will be chain stores or foreigners, and like in a great many other lines, the others will be driven out.

Readers hereof are familiar with the "Sperry System," which comprises Sperry & Hutchinson green trading stamps and Hamilton coupons. "The Sperry Magazine" is published to exploit these and, incidentally, the general premium idea—but nobody would know that to read it. It is printed as handsomely as any monthly magazine and contains just as good matter—fiction and home matter—though not quite as much. A part of the contents is advertising, like other magazines. In fact, in every way "The Sperry Magazine" is the equal of many monthlies which have very large circulations.

The plan is to distribute "The Sperry Magazine" by giving copies to retailers for free distribution among their customers. Any retailer can be proud to distribute a magazine of this character. Write "The Sperry Magazine," 2 W. Forty-fifth street, New York, for sample copy.

Weights and Measures Commission Tells of Results That Came From Net Weight Week. Thinks It Helped Cause in Many Ways. Receiver Asked for Five-and-Ten Cent Chain Store Concern. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, N. Y., July 30, 1915.

In discussing the results which have followed the "Honest Weight" Week, held in New York in June, as announced in this correspondence at that time, the Commissioner of Weights and Measures, Joseph Hartigan, made the following statement during the week as to what the direct results had been:—

1. A Weights and Measures League has been formed in the city which already has an enrollment of 61,000. This organization, it is believed, brings together the ultimate consumer and the merchant in an effort to enforce the standards established to regulate the relations of buyer and seller.

The purposes of this league are two-fold. It will arouse in both the buyer and seller a greater interest in the promotion of honest dealing, so that new confidence will exist in their relation. Each will be protected—the buyer against deceit and cheating, the seller as to his reputation. The league will try to introduce into the school system of the city, public, private and parochial, such a method of instruction as shall convey to the child the benefits to be derived from honest dealing and shall teach him the advantage of maintaining a standard of sixteen ounces to a pound and three feet to a yard. The present method by which he learns his weights and measures tables as he does his multiplication table, to recite them in sing-song fashion, will be discarded if the efforts of the league are successful. Instead, the children will study scales and actual measures.

2. A second result of the campaign is seen in the awakening of a keen public spirit among honest merchants to eliminate dealers indulging in dishonest practices which produce unfair competition. They have organized an Index Committee, to be known as the Merchants and Manufacturers' Weights and Measures Committee, which will supplement the work of the bureau and strive for honest standards.

A man representing each line of business will be placed on this committee, and it will be his duty to watch for any violations of the law in his jurisdiction and to report them to the bureau. The committee will act in co-ordination with the bureau, which will investigate all cases reported to it. The men in the trade are more familiar with conditions and better able to detect malpractices than a force of inspectors. The committee will not only aid the bureau in its work, but will protect the interests of the trades it represents.

3. Another result of the "Honest Weight Week" is the increased vigilance of the consuming public in making purchases from strange merchants.

Buyers have been too apt to accept goods at their alleged weight. The campaign has convinced buyers that such confidence, especially when placed in unknown dealers, is not to be trusted. They observe the methods and the personality of the merchant much more closely than formerly, and have shown sellers that an honest policy is best.

4. The effort to educate children has already started in the distribution of more than 1,000,000 tags among the city schools. Children no longer buy blindly, but with an idea of proper standards, according to the commissioner.

5. The fifth result is found in the realization by the housewife that cost of living problem is bound up with the question of honest weights and measures, and that responsibility for extravagance and waste depends largely upon her vigilance in marketing. Agitation favoring personal marketing instead of shopping by telephone or ordering through drivers and deliverymen, has been brought about through the co-operation of the Federation of Women's Clubs. At a convention in the Hotel Astor, 350 delegates, representing clubs in this city with a membership of more than 400,000, decided to continue the movement by issuing pamphlets and arranging lectures from time to time and indorsed a system of personal buying.

The Week's One-Time Ads.

Here's something, gents, for the wideawake chaps who believe in fitting their stores with all modern conveniences—a Barron Sanitary Water Cooler. A new idea for an ice cooler in the first place that saves a lot of ice. Then the idea of having a cooler where your customers can tank up on these hot days—that's new, too. Pretty good, don't you think so? I don't suppose anybody would deal with you just because you've got a water cooler in your store, but all the same, it's one of those things that make people glad to go to your store. It's good business. There's an ad. for this cooler in this issue—will you do your old friend the favor of looking it up? These coolers don't cost much and they're mighty good things to have.

Stores That Look Like Junk Shops

No matter how hard you try to avoid it, your store will look like a junk shop if its shelves are overcrowded.

Of course you can overcrowd shelves supported by Baines' Brackets, but you won't reach the crowded point until you've got 25 per cent. more goods on the shelves than you can put on the old-fashioned shelves.

Baines' Brackets hold up shelves without the old-time uprights that eat up space. The whole, unobstructed shelf-length is available for goods. We've figured up the gain many times—it amounts to a clear increase in shelf room of 25 per cent.

PIQUA BRACKET CO. = = Piqua, Ohio

Bought Simply Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

CROFT & ALLEN CO. Philadelphia PENNSYLVANIA

The Commissioner also stated that he would begin during the coming week to regularly publish lists and figures as to the supply of different foodstuffs on the market at any given time, the purpose being to enable the public to take advantage of an overloaded market and to be warned during a period of scarcity. For the dissemination of this information, he will use the venue mentioned in paragraph 1 of his statement.

Mr. W. N. White, of W. N. White, Son & Co., wholesale produce dealers of this city, gave out statement during the week that this year's apple crop would amount to 64,000,000 barrels, which is an increase of about 2,500,000 over last year's crop. It was thought to be the crop on the East. If these are the correct figures, it means a smaller proportion in 1915 than in 1914, which is fortunate because the 1914 crop was so large that the growers did not get out whole on a good part of their crop.

The 1915 crop is expected to be of very fine quality.

On Thursday a bill was filed in the United States Court here asking for the appointment of a receiver for the American Five-and-Ten Stores, Inc. The headquarters of the concern are at 315 Fifth avenue in this city, and maintains stores in Schenectady, N. Y.; Allentown, Pa.; Washington, D. C.; Louisville, Ky.; Cleveland, Ohio; St. Louis, Mo.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Chicago, Ill., and Lafayette, La.

The business of the concern is reported to have been poor and credit is pressing. The company recently got an extension. Its capital stock is $1,000,000 and it claims to have more assets than liabilities.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Coffee dull without change for the week in any line. Average prices high, particularly of low grades, which are influenced by large foreign demand.—Coffee dull and up at the close of the week rather weak. Rio, Santos and all milds. Slightly firmer at close of week.—Sugar excited by reason of heavy demand in refined. Raws ruling as low as 69, and refiners now selling at 70 to 75. This is a decline of 10 points from the recent selling price.—Prunes firmer and a shade

Dear Sir:—I am inclosing a letter from the American Grocers' Society, and it being a new society to me you will oblige me by giving me reference on the society.

Yours truly,

JOHN H. CALLAHAN.

We have several times analyzed the plan of the American Grocers' Society and have repeatedly advised subscribers not to invest. In a recent issue it was proven that they were offering goods below what it was certain that they cost, apparently as a bait to sell stock.

Dear Sir:—Thanks for your article No. 320 on "The Eighty Per Cent. Clause in Fire Insurance." That's great and just what I needed. Every retailer ought to read it and protect himself accordingly. Yours truly,

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market during the week has not changed. The situation is still steady to firm on all new teas, with the demand good on a fair range of prices. The foreign demand is still holding up the market in the lower grades.

Coffee.

The coffee market has weakened during the week, particularly due to the large receipts in Brazil. This has depressed futures several points and also spot. It is possibly fair to quote a decline in all grades of Rio and Santos of about $\frac{1}{4}$ cent during the week. The surplus crop is piling up in Brazil and unless the valorization plan which is talked of takes hold of it, the market will become heavier and heavier. Ordinarily this surplus would be getting to Germany and Austria. Mild coffees are sympathetically weak and in light demand. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market is becoming somewhat depressed during the week and quotations have been heard as low as 4.69, which is a decline from the highest point of about 31 points. Refined up to about the close of the week remains steady at 5.90 to 6, but late in the week all refiners declined to 5.70-5.75 for granulated. This was undoubtedly due to the large margin between raw and refined, but was somewhat unexpected, as the refiners had sold very large quantities of sugar at the higher price, considerable of which is still undelivered. The consumptive demand for sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose advanced ten points during the week on account of the high grain market. Compound syrup is somewhat firmer in consequence, but the demand being so light, the market hardly feels it. Sugar syrup is firm, but in light demand. Molasses quiet.

Fish.

There has been no important change in Norway mackerel during the week. Spot Norways are a little harder to pick up at the old price, but without any quotable change. Some new Norway summer mackerel have come into the country, but holders are asking from $2 to $3 per barrel above the normal, and as the fish is inferior the trade are not taking them. Irish and domestic shore mackerel are not cutting any particular figure. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and quiet. A few packers have named $1.40 for future red Alaska salmon, but there has been no general naming of prices. Advances from the Coast predict a 50 per cent. pack, which, if true, will probably mean an opening price of at least $1.50. The demand for salmon is fair. Domestic sardines are still dull at very low prices. Imported sardines all unchanged and quiet.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are easy. Spot tomatoes can be bought in a large way for 65 cents f. o. b., although not from all holders. Futures can be bought at 67 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents f. o. b. from the majority of holders. The trade are absolutely not interested and business is very light. If the pack comes on as quickly and as largely as is expected, even further declines may not be unexpected. Corn and peas are unchanged and quiet. There has been a good demand for new peas at the prevailing very low prices. Apples are unchanged and dull. California canned goods, both spot and future, easy and quiet. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are perhaps a shade easier, but there has been no radical change. The demand is fair. Marrows are unchanged and in quiet demand. California limas show no change for the week. Demand moderate. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and dull.

Eggs.

The egg market is unchanged and the situation in fancy eggs is firm. The bulk of the arrivals are showing defects from the hot weather and have to be sold at reduced prices. A few fancy eggs are arriving and are selling at a premium over standard quotations. A falling off in the production is likely in the near future, and if the market changes at all it will probably advance slightly.

Butter.

The butter market is active at unchanged prices. Receipts are about normal for the season and are showing more or less heat defects. At present the percentage of strictly fancy butter is very light and the market is fairly healthy on the present basis. There may be some small fluctuations, but no radical change is in sight.

Cheese.

The consumptive demand for cheese is very light and the export demand shows no improvement and probably will not show any for some time to come. The cheese now arriving is of good quality, but in the absence of the export demand the market is barely steady. No change seems likely.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are working up a little, and both spot and future are a shade firmer. Whether this will be maintained depends largely upon the foreign demand. Peaches, apricots, raisins, currants and the rest of the line are unchanged and dull.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady and unchanged, with a moderate consumptive demand. Pure lard and compound are dull at from $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ cent below a week ago, and in very light demand. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are all unchanged and in light request.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Our people in Holland have sent us their first market report. While the catch of Holland herring during this season amounted to about 28,000 barrels, against 40,000 caught about the same time last season, and which figures would not appear so very bad, it must be taken into consideration that the figures herewith given contain about 85 per cent. of herrings which were caught in as early as May and which, of course, are not fit for export, and which were consumed locally in Holland. Our people in Holland look for a restricted catch and, naturally, higher prices for Holland herring this coming season.

In Germany there is no herring fishing at all this season, and in Scotland they are fishing only in certain spots, and very little at that.

From Norway no herrings can be had at the present time, and we shall have to await the first arrivals of the steamers which have gone to Iceland before we can count upon getting any supplies from Norway, so everything tends towards high prices for herring all through this coming season.

We certainly cannot expect any cheap prices for imported sardines. While the catch in Norway is going on steadily and in a fairly satisfactory way, the prices for the catch are very high at the cheap grades unobtainable at the present time.

In Portugal they have no catch and no stocks and stocks here are at the point of exhaustion, and prices have been advanced all along the line for the small stocks remaining.

From France we have not heard word yet in regard to the catch of sardines, although if the season was ordinary the catch would be in full swing.

Spices.

The market is quite active with many articles in fair demand. Our market very poorly supplied, and any great export demand would have the tendency to greatly advance values.

Peppers.—Spots and futures are no higher. All grades in better demand.

White Peppers.—Are more active than black peppers at present. Singapore black in good request. Lampung will be unobtainable here until October or possibly November.

Red Peppers.—All grades are scarce and high in price, with prospect of record prices during the summer and autumn.

Cloves.—Supplies are small. Prices unchanged. Futures for arrival in winter are slightly lower.

Pimento (Allspice).—In fair demand at steady prices.

Nutmegs.—Only in fairly active demand at generally unchanged prices.

Mace.—Rather dull and unchanged all respects. Demand should increase from now on.

Cassias.—Saigon, as well as Bata grades, scarce on spot. China grades in fair supply at slightly higher prices.

Gingers.—In active demand at steady prices. Spot supply here is exceedingly small.

Green Ginger Root.—Great scarcity present. Demand very good. Prices steadily advancing.

Tapiocas.—Firmer and higher for futures.

Paprika.—Spot supplies of Spanish are small. Hungarian out of stock. Prices, while steady, are firm.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Celery is in limelight this week. The advance week has been maintained and high prices are probable. Sage is likely to be very high. Coriander is now in active request. Cables from Morocco quote firmer prices. Caraway and poppy firm, but unchanged.

MCCORMICK & CO.

Rice.

In sympathy with other staples, the rice market has exhibited little animation. Buyers still operating on conservative lines, taking for assortment, showing small interest as to future requirements. Blue Rose, screenings, Japan sorts are strong on account of moderate supply. Honduras styles fairly well assorted and offered at attractive prices.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast evidence no noticeable increase in the demand up to the present, although one or two tobacco markets have opened up, the trade are expected to patiently await a revival of trade.

At New Orleans there is some demand and the trade are showing interest in Honduras sorts, which relatively the cheapest grades now being offered. The rough market is crowded with very few lots being offered, it is estimated that there is approximately 3,000 bags only remaining in warehouses at New Orleans.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, occasional sales of clean rice are reported. As to rice e, due to delayed new crop, it is the eral opinion that all old rough will out of first hands prior to any mill-quantities of new reaching milling nts.

Standard Canned Goods.

There was little enthusiasm manifested the canned goods market last week, e largely, doubtless, to the most re-it developments in Washington in re-to our country's foreign affairs.
d yet, the volume of the sales was ger than in the week previous, because the buying was steady in the lead-staple lines, with indications of a ntinuanee of the same character of ying next week. The canners show a llingness to carry their goods and ait the larger demand which they feel e is bound to come with the opening the fall season, rather than urge es at the present unremunerative re-ns. The stocks in the jobbers' hands e, evidently, much smaller than usual this time in the season, hence the ducate orders within short periods. Toy's prices in this market are tempting ugh.

Orders for spot tomatoes for hurry-shipment came from all sections, om Maine on the East to Colorado l Oklahoma on the West, and from xas on the South up to Minnesota, owing that this market continues to the cheapest source of supply. While orders were not large, it is that kind continuous buying that wears away stocks in the canneries at a fairly bid rate, and encourages the packers look for better business ahead. All es of cans shared in the buying again s week, with No. 2 standards leading others by a good margin. There s some additional buying of tomatoes future delivery, but they are far from being active. Tomatoes purchased at to-day's prices look safe for the jobber.

String beans and white wax beans are on the bargain counter, hence the continued liberal buying of them in anticipation of some improvement in the prices next fall, if not sooner. During last week more carload orders were received than in any previous week, but even at that, the volume was not very great. The high quality medium priced cut beans, both green and wax, are attracting increased orders at these cheap prices. Outside of some further orders for corn and sweet potatoes there were only the usual daily small orders received this week for the other lines of vegetables.

In canned fruits there was a fair demand for the new pack of blackberries which are also on the bargain counter, and they are well worth prompt attention. The quality of them is better than usual because the weather conditions have been favorable for the crop. Strawberries are active in small lots, both the water and syruped fruit, but the other berries, as well as cherries, are dull. In fact, there was very little business done here this week in all lines of canned fruits except blackberries and strawberries. The unfavorable reports still continue about the blight damaging the pear crop very much, which is corroborated by the statements in the Maryland and the U. S. Governments' reports just published. The latest reports about the peach crop are very favorable throughout this section.

Cove oysters are firm as to prices, with a very light demand.

Express Companies Allowed to Charge More Money.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has decided that the revenue of the principal express companies of the United States are inadequate and modified its former orders to provide additional income. The present express rates are composed of three factors: an allowance of 20 cents for collection and delivery of each shipment, which does not vary with weight or distance; a rail terminal allowance of 25 cents a hundred pounds, which varies with the weight but not with the distance, and the rail transportation rate a hundred pounds, which varies with the weight, the distance and the zone. In accordance with the petition of the companies, the commission modified its order to permit transportation of the first and second factors. The effect is to increase the collection and delivery allowance 5 cents for each shipment and to reduce the rail terminal allowance at the rate of 1-20 of 1 cent a pound. As the weight increases the 5-cent increase is gradually reduced, so that on shipments of more than 100 pounds the readjustment will not make any change. By these means the express companies are expected to increase their gross revenues about 3.86 per cent.

One Manufacturer Had to Stop All Advertising Because Price-Cutting Kills Its Effect

Cheyney Bros. Says Department Stores Take Advantage of Recent Supreme Court Decisions to Cut Their Goods Below Actual Cost.

When the subject of price-cutting comes up, debate always wages warm over what result price-cutting really has on the business of the manufacturer whose article is cut. Some say indiscriminate price-cutting will speedily destroy the business of any trade-marked specialty, while others contend that while it does destroy part of it, it gets enough new business to more than make up the loss.

The following statement from a manufacturer who has gone and is still going through it, will be of interest. The statement is by Cheyney Bros., manufacturers of silks which are widely advertised:—

We are at the present time discontinuing our magazine consumer advertising, and most other forms of consumer work, because of the serious evil to our business of price cutting, which has become such a serious matter during the past year that we believe we have received no benefit whatever from our considerable expenditure for advertising. In fact, we are inclined to believe that during the last year our advertising has meant to us a direct loss.

Immediately following the decisions of the Supreme Court in relation to price maintenance, particularly that of the Sanatogen case (these decisions held that the manufacturer could not fix the resale selling price.—Ed.), we experienced difficulty with price cutting by department stores. The evil very rapidly grew, particularly in the Middle West, where during the last year as many as six department stores have sold our goods for less than they paid for them, for the purpose of appropriating our advertising for the benefit of their merchandising. The evil is so great and of such increasing magnitude that we think all people who are purchasing advertising must of necessity give the matter serious consideration. It is our intention to do whatever the law will allow us to do to maintain the integrity of our name and protect our customers against this form of piracy. When price cutting reaches the point where goods are sold by merchants for less than they pay for them, we do not see how it is possible for anybody to offer to defend the practice of price cutting.

Let Your Clerks Read This.

I have a cute little way about me whenever one of my customers tells me business is bum, of looking out at his clerks standing there in his store, and saying to myself, "You hairpins could fix up the bum business as easy as could be, if you'd only get out and get under."

Sometimes I've actually told 'em that, face to face. Did it do any good? Well, sometimes. I do give myself the credit of waking up one fellow so hard that he got to be the best retail salesman I ever knew. He could sell shoe buttons to an eel, that fellow could. He used to work for a customer of mine, and I woke him up so that he went to New York and got a job. Has a stand now in one of the hotels over there. His old boss has never quite forgiven me for that. He'd rather have had him half woke up than not had him at all. So would I.

The other day I was waiting in a store where there were six clerks. They were about like what you see in the average store, no better and no worse. "There you are," I said to myself, "every blamed one of you could sell $2 worth more goods a day if you wanted to. You've got it in you to increase your boss's business maybe $12 or $15 a day or $3,000 or $4,000 a year, without a blamed cent more expense. Why in thunder can't you people do that without having to be told?"

Of course I didn't get any answer, and I don't believe I'd have got any if I'd talked out loud.

I asked a good customer the other day how many people came in his store a day. "I know it runs different," I said, "but what's the average?"

"Oh, I suppose it'll run seventy-five," he said.

"All right," I said, "why don't you put it up to your clerks to sell each one of that seventy-five an average of one nickel more goods than they come in expecting to buy.

Just one nickel. It wouldn't work with the one that only has a nickel, but on the other hand you could sell some people more than a nickel extra. If you averaged a nickel more to each you'd increase your weekly business pretty near $25 a week, without it costing an extra cent of expense. D'ye get that?"

"Sounds all right," he said.

"It is all right. What kind of a clerk is it that couldn't make a man or a woman spend one extra nickel if he set out to do it? A clerk that couldn't do that wouldn't be worth his salt. Of course you'd have to have some stuff to sell. It wouldn't work at all to say "won't you try an eighth of a pound of something or other, only 5 cents"; there wouldn't be a blamed thing to that. It wouldn't go at all. Have some special stunt that goes out for a nickel, and all you got to do in most cases is to ask people to buy it. Believe me, people loosen up a heap more in your stores than they do in hardware stores or places like that."

"I don't want my customers importuned to buy all the time," he said.

"Importuned! To spend a nickel? You listen here. The clerk that would have to importune a customer to spend a nickel ain't a clerk at all. He's a sausage and ought to be fried."

"It wouldn't work. I know my clerks."

"Then you've got the wrong clerks," I said. "What do you pay 'em?"

"Oh, $10, $12, $14 a week."

"Well, if all they do is dish out stuff that people come in here and ask for, and tie it up, you're paying 'em too much. I say that kind of work ain't worth over $3 a week. Why any child could do it—I believe you could train a hand organ monk to do it. You could even let a customer do it herself. What's to prevent your having everything packed up in boxes, with a sign on saying what they are and how much. The customer comes in, swipes a box, pays the cashier, goes out and saves ten minutes. All you'd need would be a cashier and somebody to stick around and watch things."

"Your wheels seem unusually active to-day," he said. "Did you take a few before you came in here. I don't smell anything, but these wild schemes of yours—"

"They ain't wild!" I said. "What I'm trying to show you is that clerks ain't intended just to tie up. If that's all they're good for almost any old wages are enough to give 'em, for that work ain't worth much, believe me. Clerks is to sell goods, but blamed few of 'em do it."

"All he said was this:—"

"I know they are, but I can't fix that kind. If you can, bring them in here and I'll employ them all."

Say, it ain't quite as hopeless that, is it? I dunno, though, sometimes I see things that make me think it's pretty near it. I was in a good Philadelphia store on the Sunday before the Fourth—just 322.—A Legal Phase of the Mail Order Problem.

The following letter comes to me from a Western retail dealer in automobile supplies. Every other retailer in any line, even including burial caskets, is facing the same problem to-day:—

From our experience as a retail dealer we believe the most difficult obstacle to-day is the cut-throat mail order house. We feel that legitimate garage men and dealers should perfect some organization whereby a list of products made and distributed through legitimate jobbers only could be supplied each member. Manufacturers selling mail order houses should have no representation on this list, and members of the organization should pledge themselves to patronize only jobbers carrying lines not sold to the retail trade direct, or through the mail order house.

Our experience has been that we can readily sell an article at a legitimate profit, provided the consumer has not received some cut-price inducement. Substitution of accessories is easy and sales can readily be made from a standpoint of quality.

A great many trade problems would be solved if something like this was possible, but possibly other problems more serious would follow this method of solution. At least that is the theory of the law.

The plan which is above suggested is substantially identical with that which up to a few months ago was used by the organized retail lumber men. Readers hereof will remember that the Government got after the lumber retailers on the ground that they were seeking to monopolize the business and restrain competition. If I remember rightly they agreed to stop what they were doing, and allowed an injunction to be issued against themselves.

The lumber plan was this: There are first lumber manufacturers, who prepare lumber for sale. Then there are retailers, who have yards from which they sell to consumers of lumber, meaning such people as builders. The retailers thought that the manufacturers should sell only to them, and that only they, the retailers, should sell consumers. The manufacturers, however, thought they had a right to sell anybody who could buy the quantity, and they sold consumers too. The retailers' association got a list of the manufacturers who sold consumers and circulated it generally among the retail trade, the purpose being to induce the retailers to boycott all manufacturers except those who would agree to sell them exclusively. I believe there was a pledge to do this and a penalty for not doing it.

My friend, the dealer in auto supplies, if I understand his letter, would first organize the retail trade, and would then prepare an "honor list" of articles the manufacturers of which do not sell them to mail-order houses. These the members of his organization would pledge themselves to sell exclusively, thus declaring by implication, at least, a boycott on all other articles.

It is as clear as anything can be that this could not legally be done, and that any attempt to do it, on the part of an organization, would speedily bring the United States Government down upon its head, if the question was ever raised.

There are some features of the mail-order problem which, being questions of expediency rather than law, I shall not discuss very much. I do feel like saying this: that if a manufacturer is selling a mail-order house (a retailer) direct, and refusing to sell a regular retailer direct, even though that retailer buys the same quantity, he is guilty of gross discrimination and deserves sharp discipline. But if the manufacturer sells the mail-order house, though a retailer, because it buys the quantity, being at the same time willing to sell at the same price, any other retailer who will buy the quantity, no reasonable complaint can be made unless you contend that no manufacturer should sell any retailer on any terms. If a manufacturer will sell any retailer who buys the quantity, it would seem more logical for retailers to buy co-operatively, so as to make up the quantity, than to try and induce a manufacturer to refuse to sell the mail-order house at all.

I do discuss this to this slight extent because the logic of the regular retailer's position would always have some bearing upon the feeling of the court in passing on a given plan of defense.

If a given manufacturer is treating the regular retail trade unfairly in any way, there is practically only one thing that can be done concertedly, in my judgment. Of course any number of retailers can take individual note of the manufacturer's unfair practices, and act on them as they see fit—by boycotting the given goods, if they like—and they will be wholly within their legal rights. Or an association would also be within its legal rights if it placed before its members, or before the trade at large, the names of the manufacturers who it was alleged treated retailers unfairly. The facts setting forth what the alleged unfairness consisted of could also be set forth, but of course particular care should be taken to state what was known to be the actual truth and no more. Any such communication ought to stop about there. There could not legally be any pressure either there or anywhere else to compel retailers, perhaps against their will, to join in any movement to boycott the goods of the manufacturer in question. The facts could be stated, and the whole matter then be left open to the retailer's common sense. If he chose to throw the goods out all right—he could legally do it. If he chose to go on selling them, all right again—he must not be interfered with. There would be nothing illegal in arguments, by an association to its members, or to the general trade, as to why a given manufacturer's methods were unfair, but when everything is said that can be said, the retailer must be left alone to do as he likes. Sell FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR Instead of Bothering with Bags

One of our machines can fill 127 CARTONS with FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the time it takes to fill, fold and tie a paper bag. There are 127 more sensible things to do in a grocery store than put up sugar; it's not only a foolish waste of time, even if the boy does it, but besides the cost of the labor you must also take the cost of the bags and the twine and the loss from overweight out of the slender margin of profit.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is ready to sell when you get it; it's as handy as cans of tomatoes or bottles of pickles. It's a tight, neat, clean, convenient, sanitary package that will please your customers as much as yourself. The CARTON does not burst on the way to a customer's home and let the sugar get over everything in the basket or box, it does not burst or fall over and spill when customers handle it. Women like its cleanliness; they like the sparkling white purity of the sugar. Once you start them buying it, they will always buy it.

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs.

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find circular for criticism. This circular was distributed from house to house a few days before our demonstration day.

Would be pleased to have your criticism and point out the defects. Thanking you in advance for same,

MORRIS GROCERY CO.

The circular inclosed measured 9 x 12 inches, and was printed on very poor paper. I don't know why, because the letterhead which the Morris Co. write their letter on is on unusually good paper and is well printed. I suppose they did what a great many merchants do—they selected the paper for their letterheads themselves and let the printer select the paper for their circular. If that is true, they ought to select the next circular paper themselves, for this doesn't do them justice. Here is the reduced reproduction of the circular:—

up experience for future reference. For its purpose, I think the circular is all right, speaking now of the matter on it. I have always thought the demonstration day scheme a good one. If properly advertised it can always be depended on to get people in the store, and if you know how to handle them once they are in the thing can be depended on to pay for itself many times over. In advertising a thing like this, believe it is always a good thing to send invitations through the mail—a tasty, appealing printed card, addressed and sent under a 2-cent stamp to a selected list. Beware of the 1-cent stamp in mailing advertising—it is a heavy handicap. I was after a crowd at a demonstration like this I should never depend alone on circulars—they would always get something, but if I wanted a real crowd, I should use the invitations too.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Very evidently this circular, though sent in only last week, was used several months ago. By this time, therefore, the Morris Co. know how their Demonstration Day

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s
Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

The Boss's Orders.—When the boss gives you orders to do a certain thing, do that thing. It is not up to you to question the expediency of it. He is responsible for that. Go ahead and carry out his orders and do it without asking any questions or bothering the man with how you should do this or that in order to get to a certain point or accomplish a certain thing.

The other day a young man was told to clean the front windows. He asked the manager where he could find a ladder, then he came around to say he had no water pail. That fellow did not show the gumption of a five-year-old kid. Humble and all as this work was, the same principle applies to higher work. Never go back to the man who gives the orders for detail information. Get it from somebody else, if you want to make good and stand good. The late Elbert Hubbard wrote a little pamphlet entitled "Carrying a Letter to Garcia." The writer well remembers the splendid inspiration that that "letter carrying" brought to him and we believe it can still be bought for 10 cents. If you would like to know the real importance of doing a thing yourself, buy that booklet. If you find any difficulty in getting it, let me know.

To Solicitor.—Do you fellows go prepared to take orders every morning? To go "prepared" is to have a new written list back of your order book. The old-fashioned chap reads off—soap, starch, blue, baking powder, tea, coffee and flour. The new order clerk goes, or should go, to the head butcher, the head grocery clerk, the manager of the vegetable department and the butter department and says: "Got your list ready?" These men know what their department need pushing and, of course, what represents the most profitable and mark you, these things are always seasonable things, things that are demanded up to the minute.

We will relate an actual occurrence that illustrates the importance of preparation. It was quite a fashionable boarding house at a very popular sort. The little woman was "very busy" and didn't want a thing to-day. A young man sat down, pencil and book in hand, and went to it. He had special on fore quarters and half quarter lamb—real spring lamb. He had a 10-pound price on creamery butter and a tub price on pure lard. He talked potatoes by the barrel and cabbage by the dozen. He had a price gallon olive oil at $2.50. An odd box of soap he wanted to dispose of for $3.45 a box and an unadvertised box of cornflakes at 95 cents a dozen. Then, with the exception of the half quarter lamb, every item mentioned here was sold and quite a few more.

Naturally you will say this fellow must be a good talker. He is. How did he acquire his gift of preparation? By listening to the butcher, the vegetable man, the grocery salesman, the butter buyer—and his ever current list.

Oh, it's a fine game is the solicitor's game, if you go about it right.

D'ye Know, You Haven't Got So Much Time on the $175 Window Dressing Contest?

It closes September 1st next, which is only five weeks off. Realize that?

Do you understand that we are going to give away One Hundred and Seventy-five Dollars in prizes for the best window displays of Lipton's Tea? There are two strong reasons why you should make a Lipton Tea display now—1, they're doing a lot of advertising to your customers, and a display will yoke you up with it; and 2, it's the iced tea season. These reasons would be big enough without the $175.

Here are the terms and conditions:—

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes September 1, 1915.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store.
Other things being equal, the Electrically more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor

Full Text of the Court Decision Which Said Cream of Wheat Co. Need Not Sell Cutters

In Response to Many Requests, Decision Is Published in Full. Court Says Cream of Wheat Co. Can Sell Whoever It Likes and Federal Anti-Trust Acts Do Not Apply.

By requests of many correspondents, we have obtained and here reproduce a complete copy of the court's decision in the recent New York case in which the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. had asked for a court order compelling the Cream of Wheat Co. to sell it. The court refused the order and took occasion to say some interesting things about fixed prices, monopoly, competition, etc. We reproduce the decision verbatim:—

The business of the defendant is what is commonly called the "manufacture," and sale of the food product known as Cream of Wheat. Manufacturing is a word of such wide and loose meaning as to include the preparation by art of any finished product from raw material; but more accurately descriptive words for defendant's business are selection and cleansing of the by-product of a true manufacture, viz.: flour making.

"Middlings" are the coarse flour and fine bran separated by bolting from fine flour and coarse bran. These middlings defendant "selects," selection depending upon the grade and kind of wheat used by the miller, and then purifies or cleanses such selection. The result is cream of wheat, which is no more than purified middlings. It is not patented, and any one can make it who can get middlings, and the amount of that material annually required by the business of defendant is less than 1 per cent. of the amount thereof produced in the same period by the millers of the United States.

Obviously defendant does not, and cannot control, nor indeed does it seek to control or monopolize the production of or market for middlings. It naturally wishes to buy its raw material wherever it can procure the same easiest, best and cheapest.

Yet it has a monopoly, a perfectly lawful monopoly, in the trade name "Cream of Wheat." By the law of trade-mark and unfair competition, no one but defendant can sell under the name chosen by defendant, what any one can make and sell under another and non-infringing label. The style and dress, name and package of defendant have been extensively and successfully advertised for 18 years, until the public has grown accustomed to ask for and get something good to eat under the name "Cream of Wheat," and an identical substance under another name would have to travel the same long, hazardous and expensive path in order to get or create a market.

It is possible to assert that the (say) 1 per cent. of middlings, which when selected and purified is called Cream of Wheat, is for legal purposes, at all events, a different commodity, a separate thing or entity from all other middlings.

The point is mere dialectic, for all that makes the difference or separates the things is a name; and the substantial truth remains that defendant's business consists in lawfully monopolizing a trade name, and impressing the public with the purity, reliability and uniformity of the very common substance it sells under that cleverly chosen name. The selection of the name was quite as important as the selection of the middlings, when business began, and after so much advertising the name or brand is by long odds the most important element in the business.

Plaintiff is the founder and proprietor of an unusually large number of stores widely scattered through the Middle and some of the Eastern States. If not grocery stores in the common acceptance of that phrase, they sell many if not most "groceries." Out of more than a thousand establishments, owned by plaintiff, a large proportion are known as "Economy Stores," which are places having but a single attendant and no telephone, giving no credit, making no deliveries and closed whenever the manager leaves for meals or sleep. The maintenance charge, or overhead expense, of such stores is plainly smaller than that of groceries managed in the usual way; and at them plaintiff seeks to compensate for lack of conveniences by cheapness of price.

Such a storekeeper as plaintiff obviously has under his own hand as many outlets or places for reaching the consumer as some jobbers or wholesalers have customers. He can buy for his own convenience, and in order to sell over his own counters, in quantities as large as does many a jobber who would refuse retail trade. In short, the plaintiff is in buying a wholesaler (on perhaps no great scale), and in selling is a very large retailer.

For purposes of this discussion, relations between plaintiff and defendant begin in 1913. In January of that year defendant published a new scheme of sales, revoking all existing plans, methods or agreements. The action was timely, if not caused by legal advice based on the price regulation cases, of which the dissent in Henry vs. Dick Co., 224 U. S. 1, was the premonitory rumble, and Victor Talking Machine Co. vs. Strauss, 222 Fed. Rep. 524, is the last echo.

These sales resting on sales of patented articles are cited merely to emphasize my opinion that restrictions in use and limitations on sale are essentially the same thing, if title passes to the thing limited or restricted. The dissent in the Henry case loudly prophesied to the profession what has since become history.

By the printed scheme just mentioned, the Cream of Wheat Co. held itself out as refusing to sell to "consumers, retailers or chain or department stores." It reserved the right to refuse to sell to anybody who failed to comply with any request made, and deemed by defendant beneficial to itself, the "trade at large" or the "interests of the consumer;" and announced, as its policy, that it would "confine our sales exclusively to wholesalers." Sales, however, once made, were absolute and the transaction closed. Sale was to imply no agreement to maintain or fix any price on a resale—nevertheless, defendant requested that retail prices be kept at the level recommended by it.

This request, taken in conjunction with the reserved right to cease selling to any one who did not comply with requests from the same source, was in effect saying plainly enough: keep up the retail price or we will stop supplying you, if we think such stopping profitable. I do not suppose that this sales scheme was a contract, or anything enforceable against defendant, but it serves to show a professed state of mind.

Notwithstanding, however, this published sales plan, defendant well knowing that plaintiff sold directly to consumer, sold Cream of Wheat to plaintiff at wholesale rates and in large quantities, upon condition that in making sales over the counter no smaller price should be charged than the small retailer had to ask in order to get a fair profit, viz.: not less than 14 cents the package.

The effect of defendant's price list was and is this: the Cream of Wheat Co. sold to wholesalers at $4.10 per case of 36 packages, and in carload lots at $3.95 per case. The wholesaler was "requested" to sell to the retailers at $4.50 per case, a figure which enables the ordinary groceryman to get a moderate profit on selling at 14 cents the package. At 12 cents per package loss is almost certain, unless the goods are obtained at $3.95 the case.

In or about January, 1915, plaintiff refused to observe this agreement or request, and openly sold Cream of Wheat at its "Economy Stores" for 12 cents per package.

It is fairly inferable from this history that the published sale plan of 1913 was incomplete or inaccurate; it should have added, "we reserve the right to sell at wholesale rates and in carload lots to anybody who will not cut the consumer's price below 14 cents." Defendant's selection, acceptance or rejection of a customer did not depend upon the wholesale or retail character of his business, but largely if not wholly upon whether he could be depended upon to maintain "requested" rates.

After some talk and writing, plaintiff remained contumacious, and refused to maintain prices, whereupon defendant refused and still refuses to sell Cream of Wheat to plaintiff at any price or in any quantity whatever.

The defendant also sent out circulars to the jobbing trade pointing out the "cut rate" practices of plaintiff, and asking the recipients to see to it "that no quantity (of Cream of Wheat) at any price shall reach directly or indirectly the (plaintiff's), to enable them to continue their present menace to the legitimate trade."

In result, the situation when suit was brought was that plaintiff could not make any money on Cream of Wheat sold at 12 cents, because it could not get carload rates: but no great success attended defendant's efforts to prevent jobbers selling to plaintiff—there were and are too many men quite willing to let the Atlantic and Pacific Co. lose some money, as long as they make a little.

This condition of affairs still continues; and the main object of this action and of the present application is to compel defendant to fill plaintiff's orders for Cream of Wheat in carload lots at $3.95 per case.

Of course, the bill does not put the matter so boldly, but if the law does not warrant an order productive of the result stated, this action is of little worth.

It is not worth while to consider whether the facts above shown produce a case under the Sherman Act. If they do, the matter is not much advanced, because under that statute the plaintiff could not bring this action in equity; and if they do not, plaintiff just as firmly asserts its right to relief under the Clayton Act. I shall therefore follow counsel (none of whom has discussed the applicability of the Sherman law) and say no more about it.

It is urged that defendant's professed and published scheme of sales, plus its practice thereunder, create an actual monopoly of, and do lessen competition in, Cream of Wheat; that this result is in itself unlawful; and is produced by means which are specifically prohibited by Section 2 of the Clayton Act, viz.: price discriminations not justified by any of the exceptions of that section. As the next and final step in justification of its procedure, plaintiff asserts itself to be threatened with loss or damage, through the above stated violations of Section 2, and therefore seeks an injunction under Section 16.

The text of these sections is given, and I shall hereafter assume (but not find) that if defendant has violated Section 2, plaintiff has good right to use Section 16.

Section 2. It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities, which commodities are sold for use, consumption or resale within the United States or any territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation, or discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition. And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade.

itled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States, having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the anti-trust laws, including Section 2, 7 and 8 of this act, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings, and upon the execution of a proper bond against damages for an injunction improvidently granted and a showing that the danger of irreparable loss or damage is immediate, a preliminary injunction may issue. Provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to entitle any person, firm, corporation or association, except the United States, to bring suit in equity for injunctive relief against any common carrier, subject to the provisions of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, in respect of any matter subject to the regulation, supervision or other jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It will show my interpretation of Section 2, and emphasize any errors of construction, to pick out, sometimes paraphrase, and arrange in order the words of that section deemed applicable to the case in hand, thus: "it is unlawful for a person engaged in commerce (commerce can only mean [as the context shows] interstate or foreign commerce), and in the course of commerce, to discriminate in price between purchasers of commodities that is, 'commodities' sold by the person" first named), whenever discrimination may substantially lessen competition, or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce ("line of commerce," this vulgarism is not a term of art, but it must mean trading or dealing in the commodities [or some of them] first above spoken of); but there may be price discrimination on account of quantity of commodity sold; and persons selling goods may still select their own customers in bona fide transactions, and not in restraint of trade." It would have been simpler to say that vendors may select their own bona fide customers. I think the intent is to exclude from the exception pretended sales, e. g., consignments to undisclosed agents; and perhaps sales coupled with an attempted condition subsequent.

Plaintiff's syllogisms in support of the demand for relief are simple, thus:—

(1) Defendant has a monopoly in Cream of Wheat;

(2) through such monopoly it fixes the resale price of that article; therefore,

(3) it prevents competition in Cream of Wheat and violates the body of Section 2.

Again:—

(1) Preventing competition is restraint of trade:

(2) defendant does prevent competition; therefore

(3) it restrains trade and is not within the exception of Section 2.

If the premises of the above logical formulae are admitted in the sense and to the extent plaintiff asserts or assumes as proper, the conclusions flow as matter of course. A successful answer must deny or avoid the premises; or ascribe to words a scope and meaning at variance with plaintiff's usage.

Taking up seriatim the parts of the above propositions: it is true that defendant has a monopoly in Cream of Wheat, but has heretofore stated it is a lawful monopoly, ultimately resting on the plain truth that there can be nothing anywhere in the United States lawfully called Cream of Wheat without defendant's consent and approbation. In that substance (if legally it is a distinct substance) defendant has the monopoly of a creator; something which is not and never has been within the prohibition of any law, anti-trust or otherwise.

On the contrary, that monopoly is encouraged by patent trade-mark and copyright statutes, and the rules of unfair competition. Therefore the implication of plaintiff's premise, that there is something inherently wrong in defendant's monopoly, is false and misleading.

The minor premise, that defendant fixes the resale price, is not in my opinion true in point of fact. It would like to fix that price, so far as its minimum is concerned, but fixing connotes enforcement; that it cannot accomplish, and since 1913, at all events, the attempt has been abandoned. Let it be assumed that defendant declines business with all who refuse to maintain prices. If such refusal affected a necessity of life, or even a staple article of trade, the matter might be serious, and history might be appealed to for instances of statutory punishment, e. g., the engrossing acts. But mere abstention from dealing cannot, per se, be price fixing, because the price is not made to depend upon any contract or agreement even thought, by the parties, to be enforceable. To call defendant's acts price fixing is inaccurate, and evades obvious legal questions, viz.: whether defendant has the right to decline business; and whether it is anybody's business why the business is declined.

Therefore, because I cannot accept the meaning imputed to the words used by the plaintiff, it is not found necessary to reach the conclusion of the first proposition.

Concerning the second syllogism: it must be admitted that there is abundant authority for the general proposition that preventing competition is restraint of trade; but it does not follow that it is unlawful either to prevent any and every species of competition, or to restrain trade in any and every degree.

The only competition prevented or sought to be prevented by defendant's acts is that of Cream of Wheat against itself; the only trade restrained is the commercial warfare of a large buyer against small ones, or that of a merchant who for advertising purposes may sell an article at a loss, in order to get customers at his shop, and then persuade them to buy other things at a compensating profit. That competition, as encouraged by statutes and decisions, does not include such practices, has been sufficiently shown (with ample citations) in Fisher Flouring Mills Co. vs. Swanson, 76 Wash. 649.

It is further obvious, that when plaintiff premises that preventing competition is restraining trade, it is assumed that the resultant restraint is unreasonable; for there is nothing in the Clayton Act to compel or induce courts to hold that the trade restraint referred to by this statute differs in kind, quality or degree from that now held to be meant by the Sherman Act.

Because, therefore, I am not persuaded that the acts of defendant

Another Discussion of the Scheme of the American Grocers' Society

A Partial List of Its Prices on Proprietary Trademarked Goods, Which Are in Most Cases Jobbers' First Costs. Scheme Revealed as a Bait to Lead Retailers Into Pushing Goods Packed by Society. A Call for Retailers Who Bought Stock to Give Their Experiences.

The following is from among this journal's mail for the past week:—

Endicott, N. Y., August 5, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Do you know anything about the American Grocers' Society, as outlined in the inclosed circulars? What do you think of their plan?

A reply through your valued paper will be appreciated.

Yours truly, A SUBSCRIBER.

Evidently the American Grocers' Society has started offering its stock again. For several weeks we heard nothing about it, but now inquiries from subscribers for information have begun to come in again.

We have completely turned the scheme of this concern inside out in past issues, and have continuously advised inquirers not to invest money in it. The concern gets its supplies of proprietary goods from a Newark wholesale grocery house, which is run by one of the society's stockholders, and in many cases it sells those proprietary goods at the jobber's exact cost, counting nothing for cost of doing business. Naturally no money is earned from business like this, but on the contrary, everybody concerned in it is losing. It follows that it cannot continue indefinitely, and is probably being done merely as a bait.

Moreover, we have been looking for the manufacturers whose goods are being cut to step in and stop it. If they do, the retailers who have subscribed to the American Grocers' Society stock would find their good thing suddenly cut off, possibly before they had anything like gotten back the money invested.

The American Grocers' Society issues the following price-list:—

Magnolia milk, 48 full-weight cans to a case,	4.85	4.60
Reckitt's blueing, 8 lbs. to a box, per box....	2.40	2.16

This scheme is probably an effort to get retailers well in by baiting them with cheap trade-marked brands, after which an effort will be made to get them to push goods packed by the society or for the society. Read this from some of its recent literature:—

You will be supplied with a complete line of your own goods better in appearance and in quality than any advertised line and the profits will be about 20 per cent. to 40 per cent. greater—good enough news for any grocer.

And then this Co-operative Society will help you sell your own line through self-supporting selling plans, no matter how faint-hearted you may be about bucking advertised competition.

Customers will be sent into your store to ask for A. G. S. goods by name—of their own accord.

You'll soon build good will and a property for yourself on your own profitable, price-protected merchandise and with little effort on your own part.

SELF-SUPPORTING SELLING PLANS.

You will be supplied with window displays and selling plans by your own organization to advertise your own A. G. S. line. You will be furnished with a monthly magazine (which would cost you $25 a month if your local printer printed it, but offered to you on a self-supporting basis) with your name and store address printed on every copy for local distribution among the families in your neighborhood.

It doesn't have to cost you one red cent.

This publication will appeal to all in the family. It will send people to your store for your own manufactured goods, which you make a profit on.

You will be supplied with almanacs to distribute among your customers worth $20 a thousand in any quantity. These, too, can be made self-supporting.

It is one of the advantages of co-operation that its goods can be inexpensively advertised—without cutting down your retail profit.

Your Society goods will be the finest in existence and neatly labeled. They'll sell so fast you'll wonder what has become of them.

All you'll have to do is to use the self-supporting selling plans, put the attractive packages in your windows and your customers will do the rest.

The cheap trade-marked goods, even though only a bait, are a very good bait if it lasts long enough to enable the stock buyer to win his money back.

We have been adversely criticising the scheme of the American Grocers' Society for several months, and in all that time not one grocer has come forward and said, "I have bought stock and the scheme is all right." Surely the society must be selling some of its stock, and the retailers who have bought it must have had some kind of an experience with the scheme. If any of them are readers of this paper, will they not let us have the benefit of that experience?

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The Nanticoke Association held its first picnic on July 28th at San Souci Park.

The convention programme is about ready for publication. It is full of good things. The speakers are men of prominence and each one has a message for the retailer. From start to finish the convention will be full of interest and profit to those who attend.

The Sunbury Association has added about 25 new members during July, lacking only 10 now to 100 per cent. increase during the year.

Bellefonte merchants are talking organization. Recently a committee of merchants visited Sunbury to secure pointers.

A. A. Woods, secretary of the Butte Business Men's Association, spoke at the noon day luncheon of the Washington Board of Trade on July 22d. His subject was "Co-operation."

The Washington Board of Trade will hold a monster community picnic on Labor Day. The event will take place in the Fair Grounds and a special effort will be made to make it a community wide event and a "Get Acquainted Day."

Arrangements have been made for an all-day trip to nearby towns in the interest of organization.

The Clearfield Merchants' Credit Bureau, which is a sub-division of the Board of Trade, has voted to join the State Association.

The Wholesale Grocers' Association of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware will be represented at the convention by James Hewitt, president, and A. M. Graves, secretary.

A cordial invitation is extended to every merchant in the State, whether affiliated with a local organization or not, to attend the State convention at Meadville on September 6th to 9th, inclusive. Come and learn what is going on throughout the State for the protection and uplift of the business man and the development and boosting of our towns. Attendance at the convention is an investment, not an expense.

Mr. Smedley will speak at Indian Park, Williamsport, on August 18th, the occasion being the grocers' picnic.

The Week's One-Time Ads.

Say, gentlemen, whatever you read in this paper this week, read the Ferris ad., which is some ad.! They talk this time about old A. T. Stewart, the New York retailer—everybody's heard of him and likes to read about him. He was the first fellow that sold goods at one price in New York. John Wanamaker has his New York store now. A whole lot that Stewart did was smashed after he died by the people that came after him, but the man himself will never be forgot. The Ferris people make a mighty interesting story of it—you ought to read it. But when you're reading it, don't forget that the Ferris Ham and Bacon story is just as interesting—maybe more so to you fellows as retail grocers, because it means something personal to you as it were. As a matter of fact, I'm saying more right here about Ferris Hams and Bacon than they say in their whole 2½-page ad.—that's their way of advertising. I confess it might not be mine, as there's much to say about Ferris Hams and Bacon, but they must have found out it pays, for they've been doing it a good spell now. Here's the main point about Ferris Hams and Bacon—if you want something that's way above the average—that's always the same—that more people will be glad to pay a little more for—why, that's Ferris Ham and Bacon. Pin that in your Panama. JIMMY MANDER.

Consolidation Plans of Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association and Girard Grocery Co.

Albert Kaiser, President of Both Organizations, Forecasts Campaign. Girard, After Absorbing Association's Assets, Will Increase Its Capital to $1,000,000 and Do General Business.

The consolidation plans of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association and the Girard Grocery Co., which were briefly outlined in a recent issue, are proceeding and are practically assured of success. Mr. Albert Kaiser, president of both the association and the grocery company, gives the following description of the plans:—

We propose to make the membership of the Retail Grocers' Association include practically every grocer in the city. There are 2,500 grocers accessible and we will get as many as possible. We will make the association the promotion department of the Girard Grocery Co., and there we will give expert aid in all lines, finance, business, special campaigns for customers, sales and probably collections. Educational features will be incorporated also.

We plan to increase the capitalization of the Girard Grocery Co. to $1,000,000. We aim to limit the shareholders to 500 grocers who are members of the association now, but there will be no obligation for them to join, nor any bars preventing others from becoming shareholders. The shareholders will be asked to subscribe $2,000 each, receiving 20 shares at $100 a share. We have now a paid-up capital and surplus in the two organizations, the Retail Grocers and the Girard Grocery Company of about $200,000. Although we have not yet started to take subscriptions, we have applications at the present time amounting to $600,000, all from men who are now members.

After the plan goes into operation the Girard Grocery Co. will sell to anyone who desires to trade with it and can establish satisfactory credit. There will be immense benefits to the retailers in this system. The manufacturers will have direct access to a ready market with widespread distributing points, and therefore can reduce the cost of marketing, adding to the benefits which the retailers share.

have produced, or tend to produce, diminution of any competition favored by reason or law; or have restrained trade unreasonably (if at all), I do not find it necessary to accede to the second syllogism.

Mere doubts of the propositions of plaintiff would require refusal of preliminary injunction; but I may more distinctly state my reasons for thinking that even definite, positive and admitted price regulation is not unreasonable restraint of trade in the present instance. There is surely a very obvious difference between enforcing by legal process an agreement to regulate prices, and regulating prices by legal process. The agreement may be, and usually is unenforceable; Bauer vs. O'Donnell, 222 U. S. 1, gives the reasons; but it is not necessarily unlawful for a man to do voluntarily what he cannot be compelled to do. It follows, therefore, that, even under the Clayton Act, price regulation accomplished without undue or unreasonable trade restraint, and by a judicious selection of customers, may be lawful. It seems to be argued for plaintiff, that because defendant could not enforce a price agreement, it cannot by any method accomplish, even partially, the same result. It is an amusing commentary on this doctrine that the main object of this suit is to have this court compel delivery of Cream of Wheat at $3.95 per case, which is pro tanto price fixing.

Cream of Wheat is not a necessity, it is not even a staple article of commerce. If it be a commodity at all, the commodity and the name are synonymous. Its continued existence depends upon defendant's ability to control the marketing of its own product. The doing of what plaintiff wishes, would take from every groceryman near an "Economy Store" the last incentive to buy any Cream of Wheat, and collectively such grocery keepers are more important to the public and the defendant than is the plaintiff. If injunction were granted, defendant and many retailers would be injured, and the microscopic benefit to a small portion of the public would last only until plaintiff was relieved from the competition of the 14-cent grocers, when it, too, would charge what the business would normally and naturally bear. In short, it is plaintiff and not defendant that pursues methods whose hardship and injustice have often been judicially commented upon (U. S. vs. Freight Assn., 166 U. S. 321).

In my judgment, the prevention or limitation of practices such as plaintiff's (so far as consistent with statute law), is the reverse of unreasonable.

There remain two legal inquiries (previously suggested), to which this motion justifies answers; which answers go to the root of plaintiff's case.

The questions are (1) Does Section 2 of the Clayton Act apply to the defendant at all? and (2) Is it within the power of Congress to compel defendant to do what plaintiff demands.

Section 2 plainly identifies the lessening of competition with restraint of trade (Cf. the body of the section with the last exception). But price discrimination is only forbidden when it "substantially" lessens competition. Construing the whole section together, the last exception reads in effect that a "vendor may select his own bona fide customers, providing the effect of such selection is not to substantially and unreasonably restrain trade."

How it can be called substantial and unreasonable restraint of trade to refuse to deal with a man who avowedly is to use his dealing to injure the vendor, when said vendor makes and sells only such an advertisement begotten article as Cream of Wheat, whose fancy name needs the nursing of carefully handled sales to maintain an output of trifling moment in the food market, is beyond my comprehension.

Turning to the second question, if it be granted that Section 2 does apply, and that defendant's selection of customers results in unlawful restraint of trade, can it be possible that such person's evil ways are to be amended, not by stopping his business, but by adding to his list of customers one or many persons chosen by Congress?

Numerous individuals and corporations have been enjoined from restraining the trade of other people, no matter how flourishing the offender's trade might be, nor how greatly the general volume of trade has increased during the period of restraint. But never before has it been urged that, if the I. S. made enough of anything to supply both Doe and Roe, and sold it all to Doe, refusing even to bargain with Roe, for any reason or no reason—such conduct gave Roe a cause of action. The following decisions recognize the inherent right of refusing business—but bear no relation to the facts herein: Re Grice, 79 Fed. Rep. 627. Greater New York, Etc., Co. vs. Biograph Co., 203 Fed. Rep. 39. Adair vs. United States, 208 U. S., 161. Standard Oil Co. vs. P. S., 221 U. S. at p. 56.

If Congress has sought to give him one, the gift is invalid, because the statute takes from one person for the private use of another the first person's private property.

Using the words, sell or sale, conceals the issue. If a man prefers to keep what he has, an offer of money to salve the taking thereof, does not prevent such taking from being confiscation. The Cream of Wheat Co. is a purely private concern, except as regulated by its creating law, it is an ordinary merchant whose business is affected by no public use whatever. The statute as construed by plaintiff descends upon that private merchant, and commands him to make a contract by which he transfers his property for a price, but against his will. The contract and the price are legally mere surplusage—the constitutional violation lies in the compulsion, whereby he is deprived of his property for a private purpose.

If defendant's actual scheme of interstate business is unlawful, the United States certainly, and now perhaps an individual plaintiff, can put it out of business; but neither the nation nor any individual can take away its property with or without compensation for the private use of anyone. It is an interesting speculation, whether national price regulation, embracing compulsory sales, could not be reached by a system of Federal licenses as a prerequisite for interstate business. Semble that submissions to such prospective regulatory orders might be exacted as the price of license. There remains one pendant to the main case. Plaintiff complains of defendant's circulars to the trade as an embargo or boycott.

There is no proof that defendant refused or threatened to refuse to sell to any one who sold to plaintiff; it did request its chosen customers not to deal with plaintiff.

If it had good right to refuse dealings itself with plaintiff, and without malice asked other people to do the same thing—so far only as Cream of Wheat was concerned—defendant was within its rights. Embargo is a word without meaning in private law; as to boycott I have stated my views at some length in Gill Engraving Co. vs. Doerr, 214 Fed. Rep. 111.

Limiting the discussion to goods of defendant's own making, the opinion in U. S. vs. Keystone Watch Co., 218 Fed. Rep. 502, does not bear out plaintiff's contention. (See also Montgomery Ward & Co. vs. South Dakota & Co., 150 Fed. Rep. 413.)

The motion is denied in all its parts.

☞ Put it to yourself—you know how increased cost adds to selling price. As between two retailers, you and another, you getting all your orders through men who call on the customers, and the other doing the same amount of business to customers who come to the store—is there any doubt the other man can undersell you?

WITH THE EDITOR

A sidelight upon the court decision in the Cream of Wheat case, which is published elsewhere in this issue, is the court's description of the article Cream of Wheat, in comparison with the long-continued advertising of the Cream of Wheat Co. The court describes Cream of Wheat as follows:—

A Contrast.

"Middlings" are the coarse flour and fine bran separated by bolting from fine flour and coarse bran. These middlings defendant (Cream of Wheat Co.) "selects," selection depending upon the grade and kind of wheat used by the miller, and then purifies or cleanses such selection. The result is cream of wheat, which is no more than purified middlings. It is not patented, any one can make it who can get middlings, and the amount of that material annually required by the business of defendant is less than one per cent. of the amount thereof produced in the same period by the millers of the United States.

The substantial truth is that defendant's business consists in lawfully monopolizing a trade name, and impressing the public with the purity, reliability and uniformity of the very common substance it sells under that cleverly chosen name. The selection of the name was quite as important as the selection of the middlings, when business began, and after so much advertising the name or brand is by long odds the most important element in the business.

Without discussing whether the advertising of the Cream of Wheat Co. has been honest and truthful, what a revelation of the value of advertising this is! The Cream of Wheat Co. took "a very common substance," as the court says, and a very uncommon name. To-day, after expert exploitation, the common substance under the uncommon name has such importance that the greatest chain-store concern in the United States asks a court to compel the Cream of Wheat Co. to sell to it. And all this time, and even now, there has been nothing unusual or distinctive about the thing except its name. It was simply middlings, "a very common substance." Truly, as the court says, "the name or brand is by long odds the most important element in the business."

Another interesting phase is that the Cream of Wheat Co. is taking middlings, which are at this writing quoted at $35 to $38 per ton (about 1¾ cents per pound) and after trifling processing, packing, labeling—and advertising—is selling them under another name at about six and one-half cents per pound in carload lots. The consumer of course pays more.

The Cream of Wheat Co.'s own description of its product is as follows:—

is not only one of the most delicate and delicious breakfast foods ever offered to the public, but in addition, containing a large percentage of gluten, is one of the most healthful and nutritious foods known.

Some enthusiastic advocate of advertising said not long ago that the right kind of advertising would move mountains, if given half a chance. It would? It has. In the Cream of Wheat Co.'s case it has moved a mountain of middlings.

The consolidation plans of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association and the Girard Grocery Co., explained by President Albert

The Plans of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association.

Kaiser in another column, constitute one of the most important developments in organized grocery circles for many years. As recently reported, the association is preparing to transfer its large assets to the Girard Co., which when that is done will have a capital and surplus of about $200,000. This is itself stupendous, considering how it had to be gotten together, but it will be at once increased to $1,000,000, making the Girard by far the largest co-operative concern in the United States. After the enlargement the concern will accept members without the obligation to subscribe $200, which has always been a fetter on the growth of the organization. Any retail grocer can join and buy who is respectable and can establish a credit. With nominal entrance fees, it can hardly be doubted that this will increase the membership just about as much as the association wants to increase it. Indeed it is hard to see how any desirable grocer could stay outside the association under these circumstances.

The Philadelphia Association is exceedingly fortunate in one thing: in the writer's time it has never had a factional fight. Albert Kaiser, who owns a hardware as well as a grocery business, has been president for many years. In some way he has managed to keep several hundred grocers, many of them immediate competitors, working in harmony, without the slightest apparent desire to disagree from the chosen heads of the association in matters of policy. This is a remarkable achievement.

While in response to requests we reproduce the full text of the decision in which the United States District Court refused to compel the Cream of Wheat Co. to sell the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., there is nothing new or remarkable in it. The American Fair Trade League says: "This decision strongly supports the standard price principle as embodied in the Stevens bill and recognizes the chief arguments for its enactment. Following a long series of adverse rulings it is as welcome as a ray of sunlight in utter darkness."

Nothing of the sort. The decision merely decides what was never even denied before, viz., that a private trader may choose his own customers. The case is miles away from the situations contemplated by the Stevens bill and has nothing to do with them. It is foolish to talk as if the decision means new law—"after a long series of adverse rulings"—the adverse decisions were on other points which this case does not even touch.

The Gimbel grocery store, which is managed by E. L. Smyser, has an exceedingly admirable plan of circularizing its employees every week, with the object of giving them enthusiasm and pep. Thomas P. Hunter, head of the Acme Tea Co., did the same thing. The object is to establish and maintain a connection between the heads of the business and the clerks, which will not only make the clerks feel more important and appreciated, but will also make them feel that they are under supervision and must keep on their job.

The following good stuff is from the current bulletin to the Gimbel grocery clerks:—

Get addresses right—not 95 per cent right, but right. No matter how well you wait on a customer, everything is upset if the goods are sent to a wrong address.

In hot weather many people buy only for limited periods—a few days ahead—and they want their goods when they want them. If not delivered on time, there's a dissatisfied customer—maybe a lost customer; and your sales suffer in consequence.

There is a direct connection between your volume of sales (by which your store record is judged) and the customer you lose from any cause.

Think a minute: Everything is made ready to your hand to enable you to make a sales record—good goods, great variety, unlimited quantity, fair prices. All you have to do is to sell them—not by over-persuading customers, but by using "gumption."

Go to it! Let's see how much we can make this August sale beat last August's record.

There are grocers criticising the Gimbel grocery store to-day and blaming it for taking trade from them, who never give their clerks spark of encouragement or inspiration from one year's end to another.

The following most interesting description of a wholly mythical person is contrived by "D. Frank Crane" whoever he is, in the Philadelphia "Evening Bulletin." It is headed "Our Grocer."

Our grocer knows his business. He knows the best part of his business, which is cultivating the friendship of his customers.

His store is as neat as a pin. There is no trash on the floor. His shelves are attractively arranged. He keeps the place looking like an exhibit at a fair all the time.

His clerks do not wear dirty aprons.

They are all polite. He had a grouch-face once, but fired him the second day.

When you come into the store somebody always greets you. If all the clerks are busy, one of them will excuse himself for a moment to his customers, speak to you and ask you to pardon delay, to look around and see if you fancy anything, and you will be waited on as soon as possible. You are not ignored and made to feel that you have intruded somewhere you are not wanted.

When a clerk writes down your order it is in duplicate, and you are asked to look over the list and verify it.

Nothing New in the Cream of Wheat Case.

Fine on the Surface.

Pep for Clerks.

Sugar Refiners Make Hit With Large Buyers by Rebating on High Priced Sugar. Union Pacific Tea Co. Absorbs Another Chain. New York State Retail Grocers' Association May Ask Congress to Abolish Premium Schemes. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, August 6, 1915.

The sugar refiners have come in during the week for considerable praise and laudation on behalf of the trade, on account of the fact that they released all the jobbers who had bought sugar at 6 cents from their obligation to take it out at that price after the market declined. As readers heretofore know, granulated sugar has for several weeks been selling from 5.90 to 6 cents per pound wholesale. During the greater part of that time it sold at the latter figure. Several weeks ago refiners passed around the word that they considered it safe to buy sugar at 6 cents and in consequence of that large buyers loaded up very heavily. In most cases considerable of this sugar remains undelivered in the refiners' hands, but the jobbers were all obligated to take it at the purchase price. By reason of heavy competition among the refiners and the fact that the margin between raw and refined has been rather unusually large, the market for refined sugar sharply broke during the week and some refiners are now taking orders at 5.60 per pound for granulated. If the jobbers who had hundreds of barrels of sugar bought at 6 cents had been held to their legal contract, it would have meant a loss of many thousands of dollars. The refiners, therefore, are to be congratulated on doing the decent thing and in allowing those who had bought sugar at the higher price, which remains undelivered, to take it out at the market price on the day of withdrawal. This rebate does not extend to sugar which the jobbers already had in store, and which, of course, was bought at the higher price. On that they must bear their own loss.

The Union Pacific Tea Co. of New York has purchased the Peerless Food Co., which operates 23 stores, 17 of them being in Newark, N. J.; one in Bloomfield, 3 in Irvington, and 2 in Harrison.

The officers of the Peerless Co. are: Geo. S. Murphy, president; F. J. Murphy, vice-president; Walter S. Dickieson, secretary and treasurer.

The Union Pacific Tea Co. up to this time sold teas, coffees and spices. It operates 100 stores extending over most of the United States, as far East as Maine and as far West as Colorado. It is said that the Union company will gradually get into the general grocery business in all of its stores.

Another adulterated butter indictment was found during the week, against Lestrade Brothers, of this city, the charge being "conspiracy to defraud the United States Government of internal revenue taxes." It is claimed that the scheme succeeded to the extent of about $50,000.

It was worked in this way: The Lestrades maintained a factory which they called a "ladled butter" factory. In this they worked up a mixture composed partly of butter and partly of milcora, which costs 10 cents a pound. They bought the milcora from the Dried Milk Co. Milcora is a sort of milk powder. The Lestrades did a large business in the mixture, selling from 2,500 to 3,000 pounds a month.

The Government claims that it was all what the law understands as "adulterated" butter, and was all subject to a tax of 10 cents a pound. The Lestrades have been selling it as pure butter and have paid no tax upon it. It is said that they had a splendid thing of it and were making money "hand over fist," as they have been buying the milk powder in quantities of about 30,000 pounds a year.

In addition to the tax the Government claims that they were liable to a yearly license fee of $600. The Lestrades will fight the case on the ground that the grade of butter they were making had long been sold for export, especially to tropical countries, and had never been questioned as to its purity.

If the eggs are not above reproach, if the butter is not sweet, if anything he sends you is unsatisfactory, he is glad to have you return it. He'd rather lose a sale than a customer.

While he is accommodating in his dealings, he is strict about payments.

On his monthly statements is a printed note, saying: "This is a grocery store. It is not a bank. We would like to do anything to please you, except lend you money. To extend your credit over a month is the same as lending you money. Don't ask us. Bills are payable monthly, and if not paid by the 10th credit will be discontinued."

He does not care for customers who are slow pay.

He has a special telephone where a special clerk looks after regular customers. For instance, he will call up Mrs. Jones and say:—

He impresses his delivery clerk with the price. And there is but one price. No haggling. Take it or leave it.

We take the liberty of asking a question: Given a grocer like this—all that is admirable and dependable in every way—how many customers would pay him 15 cents for something in preference to buying it for fourteen in some other place which doesn't compare with

OUR NEW DEPARTURE IN ADVERTISING*AUGUST LETTER—To Progressive, Experienced, Well-Principled GrocersOur Good Friends:—

Our Letter last month presented one of the busiest of busy scenes in our big City, illustrating the fine work the Traffic Policemen are doing in our busiest thoroughfares to keep things moving, giving safety and a fair chance to all, rich or poor, high or low. numbered by the score. These, naturally, attract attention. This is the NEW New York, but just now may we present to you OLD New York—so very old, either, a story of sixty or seventy years ago.

Alexander Turney Stewart was born near Belfast, Ireland, October 12, 1803. His Progenitors were Scotch who had emigrated to the North of Ireland. He was educated in Trinity College, Dublin, and thought he was preparing himself for the Ministry. Owing to the death of his Father, leaving him a patrimony of $3,000 or $4,000, he came to New York in 1823, teaching for a year in a very select Private School in Roosevelt Street, then a fashionable center. But the Merchant spirit was sprouting in him and in September, 1825, he invested his entire inheritance in Belfast Laces and Linens and hiring a store at 283 Broadway, nearly opposite where our old City Hall now stands, at a rental of $250 per year, he began his experience as a storekeeper. Extremely frugal, industrious, with true merchantly grasp and spirit, his Store thrived wonderfully. Twenty years after, in 1848, he bought the block on the East Side of Broadway between Chambers and Reade Streets, for $65,000, and there he erected what was everywhere published as "The finest Dry Goods Store in the Country." Fifteen years more he leased the block at Broadway, between 9th and 10th Streets, and at a cost of nearly $3,000,000, erected his famous Retail Store; when this was completed and opened, the two establishments employed 2,000 Clerks, etc., and the annual Expense Account reached a million dollars, fabulous details for those days.

The Wholesale Store of A. T. Stewart & Co., Broadway, Chamber and Reade Streets, 1873

With this change in location of the Retail Business, the White Marble store at Chambers Street was given over entirely to the Wholesale Business, and from 1873 to 1876, the entire sales amounted to $70,000,000 per year.

In the meantime, A. T. Stewart had established Branches in the principal Commercial Centers of Europe and had gained control of many Mills and Manufactories in this Country. It was said he had a habit of taking up Mills of Insufficient capital, buying them and running them himself under the charge of the unfortunate Mill Owners. A warm friendship sprang up between General Grant, then President, and himself, and in March, 1869, General Grant nominated Mr. Stewart for Secretary of the Treasury. He was not confirmed by the Senate, however, an old Law prohibiting any Importer of Merchandise from being appointed to that office and although it was earnestly proposed that this Law should be repealed, the Nomination was not successful.

About that time he bought a fine plot on the northwest corner of Fifth Avenue and 34th Street, where he erected a marble palace home, then said to be "The Finest Private House in the New World." His Picture Gallery was a striking feature, containing $750,000 worth of notable Works of Art.

Mr. Stewart was always well attired and liked to have things match. He had a dainty coupe with liveried driver and a pair of sorrel horses of good blood. So he was driven from home to 9th Street and Chambers Street, and elsewhere as business might call him. And the bystanders said, "There goes Alexander T. Stewart!"

He was very direct in his speech, reserved and autocratic. Having the report from his Cashier's department one morning that B. & C. were behind-hand in their remittance he called an Assistant Corresponding Clerk, who came trembling before the great Magnate.

"Write," said the Merchant, "to B. & C. at once."

"Yes, Sir," said the nervous Clerk, "But what shall I write?"

A little more severely the Proprietor answered, "Something or nothing, and that very quick."

The Clerk bowed himself out with shaking knees. Two mornings later the Cashier laid on Mr. Stewart's desk a letter enclosing check for the full amount due from B. & C. He remembered the circumstances and summoned the Clerk again.

"What did you write to B. & C.?"

"Just what you told me, Sir."

"I told you nothing," said Mr. Stewart, "What did you write?"

"Why I asked you what I should write, and you said, Sir, 'Something or nothing, and that very quick!'"

The Merchant Prince smiled grimly and the anxious Clerk was excused.

Alexander T. Stewart was not only known as the most progressive and intense Merchant of the day, but his charitable gifts were notable. In 1846 he sent a shipload of provisions to the famine-stricken people of Ireland and offered a free return to this country on this vessel to immigrants who could read and write and were of good moral character. In 1871, after the Franco-German War, he donated a shipload of Flour to France. He subscribed $50,000 to the Relief Fund after the Chicago Fire and earlier, during our own War, he gave $100,000 to the United States Sanitary Commission.

In 1876 he bought the block on Fourth Avenue between 32d and 33d Street and began the erection of a huge Home where shopgirls and working women might find comforts at a weekly cost within their means. He also bought a large plot in Garden City, towards a scheme to furnish homes within reach of many of his employees and there he planned the erection of "The great Cathedral of the Incarnation." This was bestowed by his widow in 1886, ten years after his death, upon the Diocese of Long Island, with an annual endowment of $15,000 for its support.

Although he was called at that time "The Foremost Merchant and Philanthropist in the United States," a strange fatality followed these larger plans of beneficent work. It was found the Home could not be successfully run for the class intended and his Executors changed the purpose and it was revamped into the Park Avenue Hotel. The Garden City Scheme was not a practical success and the Cathedral, although a notable building, has not yet justified the large expectations of its donor.

Mr. Stewart died April 10, 1876, leaving all his fortune to his widow, with a letter directing certain generous bequests to a number of worthy Charities. These, however, all failed of execution. A provision in his Will gave $1,000,000 to his Legal Adviser and Executor for his services in this Trust, and in winding up the business of A. T. Stewart & Company. Strangely enough, not long after, his widow, in consideration of this same $1,000,000 in cash, signed a Deed conveying to the Executor the entire business with its good will and assets. This was carried on under the names Hilton, Hughes & Co., and E. J. Denning & Company, but in a few years there came inglorious failure and A. T. Stewart's Estate, valued at $40,000,000 at his decease, was apparently frittered away and diverted to hands of those not of his kin.

The famous Stewart's Retail Store now bears at its door a bronze tablet which we reproduce:—

Tablet as it appears today.

Riding up Broadway the other day Our Senior's eye caught the old time famous Wholesale Marble Dry Goods Palace at Chambers Street. "How are the mighty fallen!" It was rented to various tenants for long years—a large part being occupied by the City's Financial Offices until the new Municipal Building was occupied two or three years ago.

Although this block was very imposing at its erection, in our picture it is dwarfed by the huge Edifice of the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, since erected next to it on Chambers Street, and by the over-topping Dunn Building on the opposite corner of Reade Street.

And then, alas, such changes! One Store in the middle of the block on Chambers Street bears the sign, "NICOLAS RESTAURANT."

Two large Box Bushes in tubs ornament the sidewalks. Oh, Shades of Greatness! What do you say to this? A Dago Fruit Stand on the sidewalk occupies one window on Chambers Street, another Fruit Stand covers three full windows on Broadway, and a third has the North Corner of Reade Street, while in every window of the second story is placarded in large letters on white paper posters, "TO LET"—and this only fifty years after A. T. Stewart & Company was in the fullness of its glory. The white marble palace home was torn down years since and its noble site filled with the Buildings of the Knickerbocker Trust Company, James McCreery & Co., etc., etc.

The story of the bitter irony of Fate has another chapter. The body of Alexander T. Stewart, arrayed in costly burial robes, in a rich casket, was deposited in his chosen grave in the yard of Old St. Mark's Church on Second Avenue, between Ninth and Tenth Streets, barely a stone's throw from the Grand Retail Emporium of which he was so proud. "Earth to Earth!" "Dust to Dust!" "Ashes to Ashes." Rest in Peace. Alas, No! Not long after, at midnight, in a raging storm, men entered the sacred enclosure! 'Twas the work of a few minutes only to reach and rifle the casket! The dead body of "The Merchant Prince," torn out, thrust into a rubber bag, was lumbered into a waiting coach and hurried to a hiding place, from which the ghouls negotiated for a ransom and immunity. It is said the damnable bargain was in time closed and this desecrated human form at last rests in a secure Mausoleum in The Garden City Cathedral.

If, perchance, Alexander T. Stewart knows what has transpired since, must he not turn in his coffin with the regularity of clock-work? And if today some new electrical device could throw across the skies in scintillating letters, "Alexander T. Stewart" is it likely that one in ten of the inhabitants of Greater New York would know for whom the name stood? Is not this one of the most startling Commercial Romances ever written? Verily, the wisdom of the Ancients still holds good—"He heapeth up riches and cannot tell who shall gather them." This fortune wasted, and the notable life to a large extent wasted, too? Listen! Hear the Cathedral Chimes toll their Miserere of Disappointment. What remains of it all for the betterment of Society or an inspiration to Moral Excellence?

How were great elements of strength nullified by strains of colossal weakness? "And following men" do not become great simply by putting their feet in great men's shoes.

From this striking record a half century old of prosperity and failure, we turn with content to our modest Mott Street Plant ready to carry on our old time ambition, "to make the Ferris Delicious Trade Mark Hams and Boneless Bacon the finest in the World." One High Quality only! One Price only! Selling our own Product only! We have made many loyal and valued friends and our hearts are big enough to welcome many more. If any Merchant reader of our August Letter is not already in our charmed circle "the latch string is out" and the best we have is at his command. You see how far afield we have gone in our August Letter from simply "boning you" to buy Ferris Meats.

If you called at our office this morning it would first of all be to a meeting of friends; if business could work in to advantage afterwards, all right! We have just received a letter from a Southern Editor in which he says: "I shall not soon forget my visit to your Mott Street Plant a few years ago when I had a regular Southern welcome. Quite naturally, the Ferris Products have since been most palatable and an opportunity to express my views of their merit has been a sweet morsel. It is characteristic of a Southerner to mix sentiment and business, and I trust the above expression will not give offense." Thank you, Mr. Editor! Let us mix sentiment with business right along; it makes a Merchant's life the more worth living, does it not?

A prominent New England Lawyer writes us: "I am unfortunate enough to be very fond of your Hams and Bacon, for I cannot get them just at hand. I am about to leave for 'The Woods' and wish you would ship to our grocer at Vanceboro, Me., a supply for us." A fine Southern Hotel writes: "We have never been able to get as fine Breakfast Bacon as yours." Editor Barrett, popular proprietor of the American Grocer, he of a clear head and a kindly heart, had a Ferris Ham Roasted according to our Recipe and served on his dinner-table the other day when he was entertaining a Notable Guest. He telephoned us later: "That Joint was done to a turn and how delicious it was. My Guest and my Family all said it was a greater treat than the finest feast on other Meats could have been."

Of course, we would like to have you make THAT IRRESISTIBLE FLAVOR of the Ferris Curings a trump card to win you trade, satisfaction and profit. So come to us for keeps when you are satisfied it means nuts in your basket. We have no special joy in fishing for "Nibblers."

And how do you like our August Letter? Will you take it home and read it to the good wife and the young people in a quiet evening hour?

With all good wishes,

Your sincere friends,

Where to Sell Waste Paper and Burlap Bags.

Latrobe, Pa., July 29, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear sir:—As the Peters Paper Co., of Kingston, Pa., three miles from Latrobe, are not buying waste paper at the present time, would like to have the names and addresses of several firms in this part of the State who buy such goods.

Would also like to know to whom we can sell empty burlap sacks and scrap burlap to.

Inclosed find stamped envelope for reply.

Yours very truly,
BRIDGE & GEARY.

We know of two dealers in waste paper in this city, but none any nearer to you. They are: Penn Paper and Stock Co., Marshall and Willow streets, and the Coll Paper Co., 305 Florist street.

Philadelphia Bag Co., Water and Tasker streets, and Charles T. Robinson, 107 Walnut street, both of Philadelphia, are dealers in burlap bagging, etc.

Looks Like Another Fake.

Wrightsville, Pa., July 30, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—On June 18th we shipped to C. G. Williams & Co. one box, 66 pounds, dairy butter and sixty dozen of eggs on commission. Have several times received letters and shipping tags from them and on the strength of their assertions of quick sales and prompt returns we gave them a trial shipment. We did not hear from them, although I wrote to them three times for the returns but never received an answer. Please see if you can get the money for us.

Respectfully,
H. W. HUNTZBERGER.

This looks like another fraud. The concern inquired about is "C. G. Williams & Co., wholesale commission merchants, butter, eggs and poultry, 344 N. Front street (removed to 331 N. Front street, Philadelphia)." No such concern is listed in the directories, either telephone or business, and nobody in the trade of whom we inquired knows anything about them. Nor are they rated. A significant fact is that their name, "C. G. Williams & Co." differs only by an initial two from the names of other perfectly responsible concerns he

If you consigned the goods these people to be sold for your count, and did not actually sell them, you can arrest them for larceny as consignee if they do not remit the proceeds. To do that you must come to Philadelphia and swear out a warrant—it is for you to say if the amount is worth the trouble.

We would have had a law in Pennsylvania preventing such incidents as this if the honest commission men of the city had not blocked it.

Palatable Tidbits From a Winter Short Course on Retail Merchandising

Some of the Best Things From a Course of Lectures Which the Jobbers and Manufacturers of Sioux City, Iowa, Gave the Retail Trade of That Section.

I remember one case which came to my attention last fall. A dealer in a small town, in order to meet his bills on his stock of goods coming in, and also to make needed repairs and improvements on his store building, found it necessary to borrow about $1,000. He went to his banker and asked him for the loan, and the banker asked him three questions—first, what his inventory contained; second, what are your creditors' accounts, how much you owe; and third, what are your customers' accounts? These three questions, on the answers to which he would determine what the net worth of that merchant was in his business. As a matter of fact, this merchant could tell the banker nothing in regard to the things it was important for him to know; that is, whether or not this merchant could meet his interest on the loan. He was going to meet the interest, he would have to make it out of the profit; so what the banker could have asked for was a statement of the profit; but the retailer was unable to furnish the information even that he did ask. His last inventory had been taken in July. He kept nothing but a common, ordinary merchandise account. He had nothing to show what the inventory would be, so had to estimate, and he estimated it at about $7,000. Then he had no way of determining his creditors' accounts except to go to the accounts and add them up. He found these to be about $900. He had some four hundred customers' accounts, and he had absolutely no way of ascertaining how much they were except to go through them and add them up. So the best he could do was to estimate them, which he did as about $600. The banker did a little figuring, looked his commercial accounts over and came to the conclusion that this man was not making as much money as he had been, and therefore refused the loan. This merchant knew he was making as big sales as he always had. He knew there was something wrong, but what could he do? He could not go to another banker and get a loan. He had been refused by one banker and no one else would take the risk. What he did was to install a new system. He wanted to know just what his condition was, and he found out several facts that shocked even himself. He found that his sales were mostly charged sales. The collections were not coming in as fast as they should, so it was necessary to send out a collector to bring in his accounts. This he did and was able to discount most of his creditors' bills. At the end of a month he went to the banker and showed him exactly the profit he was making every day, showed him what the inventory was every day and that he had been able to cut down on this inventory during the month and probably would cut it down still farther. He went to another banker this time and secured the loan. The most important thing in that report was that it showed just what his profit amounted to every day. It was the profit with which he was able to pay the interest and repay his loan when it became due. This simply shows the power the bankers have to demand a proper record of the retailer.—By R. A. Stevenson, who spoke on "Retail Accounting."

We have not learned how to use the telephone. There is an art in telephoning. You want to teach your sales people telephone salesmanship; teach them to get the right kind of tone, and how to hold the telephone and how to speak. Nine people out of ten don't know how to talk over the telephone and get the best results. You should hold your mouth within one inch of the transmitter and speak directly into it. The average person holds it off to one side. It is a hard thing to talk into the telephone correctly. I have seen many people in talking hold the transmitter where they can look into it with their eyes; and I have sometimes thought it might be a good idea if the telephone company would fix up some picture above a telephone or a looking glass for a person to look at. I do not mean that as a joke. Have your voice pitched in a natural tone, probably not quite so loud as in natural conversation. There are lots of sounds that are hard to get over the telephone. "Three" is one of them. Another one is "five," and another "nine." The reason is in speaking through the telephone we have difficulty in getting the sounds to go from our mouth, and especially when holding the telephone off to one side of the face. You cannot get the sounds of B, P, M, N, S, etc., over the phone well without holding your mouth as I have told you. There is a thing it will be well worth your while to teach your sales people when you get home—how to use a telephone. This is an art we have not yet learned as a people. When you get unsatisfactory service from the telephone, the fault is not always with trouble is often with the people the telephone company. The using the phone.—By Paul H. Neystrom, who spoke on "Salesmanship."

There are certain pitfalls waiting for the merchant who changes his system from credit to cash, and I am going to point out some of them. One is allowing customers to overstep the limits set. For instance, suppose Mrs. Jones comes into the store, picks out an article valued at $1.75, opens her hand bag and finds that she has left her purse at home. Now Mrs. Jones is a good customer, the wife of your local banker, who is worth a great deal of money. She is rather touchy and has to be handled with care, and you hate to offend her. What are you going to do about it? I will tell you how this worked out with one merchant. He told her, very courteously, that he was running a strictly cash store, that he was treating every one just the same, and he could not break the rule to one and treat the others right. Mrs. Jones got mad and he let her go out of the store without the goods. Within a very few weeks she was back and buying as much as ever. She had got over her "huff." That is the only way in which to handle a cash business. Suppose the merchant had made an exception to his rule and let her take the goods without paying for them. Across the street might be Mrs. Smith, who would try the same thing and receive different treatment. I do not need to tell you the outcome. Suppose some one else had been in the store besides the banker's wife. Do you suppose they would have kept quiet about that transaction? It would soon have been all over town that that merchant's cash system was such in name only. It must apply to all or it will cease to have the desired effect, and you might just as well run a wide open credit store.—By H. K. Zuppinger, who spoke on "Retail Credit."

Have some pads made out of scratch paper, about fifty sheets to a pad, with the word Wanted in heavy type. Then call your clerks together and tell them they must use those slips whenever they notice any stock running low. Have them write on the slip the article, the quantity now in stock, about when the new goods will be needed and the clerk's initials. One store in Minneapolis has this plan: Whenever a clerk reports that he is completely out of some line of goods, he gets a black mark against his name, and if this happens too often he is fired. Place on your desk a spindle and instruct your clerks that as soon as they make out a want slip it must be placed on that spindle. Then each evening you should do one of two things—either enter the items on the want book for the salesman, or send in a mail order.

We have heard a lot of late about the jobbing house that does not give the man who mails in his order as good a price as that man could get from the salesman. If you find that attitude on the part of the jobbing houses you are dealing with, take it up with headquarters. I know of jobbing houses who will give you just as good a price on a mail order as the salesman could. If your jobbing house does not do that, it is up to you to get another jobbing house. Go to headquarters. I do not mean the salesman, but headquarters and see that the thing is done. The mail order is a great convenience to you, and you cannot afford to pay more for those goods than you would do the salesman.—By H. K. Zuppinger, who spoke on "Buying."

Dry Goods Shipments Below a Year Ago.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Weather conditions have been a serious handicap to dry goods distribution during the week, and wholesale shipments show a decrease as compared with those of the same week a year ago.

Retailers, however, have visited the market in larger numbers than during the corresponding week last year. Collections are normal.

Chicago is in readiness for the Market Week and Style Show, which starts Monday, August 2d, and will continue until August 7th. All advance reports indicate that it will be the biggest event of its kind ever held in Chicago, and a large attendance is anticipated.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week, business being satisfactory and fairly active. Practically anybody with desirable new tea to-day can sell it at full prices. No changes have occurred in prices during the week.

Coffee.

Coffee is weaker and somewhat demoralized. Probably all grades of Rio and Santos have averaged a decline of about $\frac{1}{8}$ cent during the week. The cause is larger receipts in Brazil. As yet the proposed new valorization plan is not in shape to take over this surplus, and in consequence the markets everywhere are weakening under its influence. The demand for Brazil coffees is very small and is confined to wants only. Milds are no lower for the week, but the feeling is slightly weaker in sympathy with Brazils. Milds are selling now on a low basis. Mocha is a shade lower on spot and considerably lower to come forward, but nobody knows when the coffee which is to come forward will arrive. Java unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar market has weakened considerably during the week, and refiners are now selling granulated at 5.60 to 5.65. Raw sugar is also somewhat weaker and the whole tone of the sugar market is easy. The refiners had considerable sugar sold at 5.90 and 6 cents for granulated, but have reduced the price on all of this which was undelivered. The Pennsylvania was the last refiner to do this, not being inclined to do it at all, but under the circumstances finally decided to come down with the rest, although they did so only after prescribing restrictions as to the time of delivery. The consumptive demand for sugar is very fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup dull at ruling prices. Sugar syrup firm and comparatively high, but dull. Molasses unchanged and quiet.

Fish.

The spot price of Norway mackerel remains unchanged from a week ago, but is firmly held on account of small supplies. New Norway mackerel is not as yet figuring to any extent. Shore mackerel is being quoted at about a dollar a barrel higher on account of scarcity, and is being bought to some extent. Cod, hake and haddock are all unchanged and quiet. Domestic sardines show no change for the week. The quotation in a large way for quarter oils f. o. b. Eastport ranges from \$2 per case to \$2.10. There is information from a reliable source that not a case of quarter oils cost the packer less than \$2.35. Vicious competition among the packers appears to be the reason for the present situation. Imported sardines show no change. Salmon is stiffening on account of confirmed advices of about one-third shortage in the pack of Red Alaska. The price on spot is about $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents higher. No price has yet been named by packers generally for future salmon.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are still inclined to be easy, though prices show no change from a week ago. If the packers tell the truth, both spot and future quotations are below the cost of production. The demand is quiet. Corn shows no change for the week. Peas have been selling quite largely on account of the very low price. The price is not improved for the week, and peas generally are inclined to be low. Apples unchanged and dull. California canned fruit shows no change either spot or future, the general feeling being easy. Small Eastern staple canned goods show no change and quiet demand.

Dried Fruits.

Both spot and future prunes are rather neglected and are unchanged in price. Apricots have advanced about a cent a pound, due to unexpectedly large foreign demand. Domestic demand is cutting no figure. Raisins, currants, peaches and the balance of the dried fruit line are all unchanged and dull.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are working downward and possibly a decline of 10 cents per bushel can be quoted for the week. The demand is quiet. Mar-

Cheese.

market is dull and unchanged, though the situation is not strong.
The production of cheese is a little above normal at the present time.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are steady and unchanged in price, with a fair consumptive demand. Pure and compound lard are dull at a decline of about $\frac{1}{4}$ cent. Dried beef selling fairly well at unchanged prices.
Canned meats and barreled pork are in moderate request at unchanged prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

There is a good demand for salt herrings of all kinds, but very little of desirable quality is to be had. No shipments have arrived as yet of new Holland herrings. Of Scotch herrings, small shipments are arriving rather infrequently, but the prices paid for those herrings which are being shipped here are so enormous that no one ventures to import any of those herrings on a large scale, being afraid of heavy losses.
The fishing in Scotland is so very limited and the demand so large, that prices are naturally tending high. It is rather too early as yet to expect herrings from Norway, although the first vessels from Iceland ought to return soon to Norway. However, in view of the scarcity of all kinds of herrings, and in view of the large demand, prices are likely to be rather high, and continue to rule so right through the season.

FINE CATALOGUE AND COLOR WORK

No. 927 Arch Street, Philadelphia

Our people in Ireland report shipments for the week of 475 barrels Irish mackerel, bringing the total shipments to date of 1914 Irish autumn mackerel to 20,417 barrels and of new spring 1915 mackerel to 20,671 barrels, a rather small quantity, which simply shows that the Irish fishermen are not very anxious to risk their lives in going out to catch mackerel.

Spices.

The market is fairly active, with few changes, except in herbs and seeds. The consumption in our country during the next three months will be large—stocks are generally small, and when we consider the uncertainty of securing goods from abroad, indications would point to a firm and higher market.

Peppers.—All grades are unchanged. Stocks here are being fast sold out. In fact, holders are rather indifferent to sell at prevailing prices. We expect to see higher prices rule during the next two months.

Cloves.—Steady, but unchanged in all positions.

Pimento (Allspice).—Unchanged and dull at present prices, which are very low.

Nutmegs.—Rather quiet and neglected for all grades.

Cassias.—Are in fair demand and stocks here are fairly plentiful. Prices of futures in China grades are above spot values to-day.

MARKET NOTES.

A great raft of poor tomatoes have been coming to market, and they have been given away in some cases by the dozen baskets. These were first earlies, even the best of which have been ruling at 10-15 cents. Good second earlies are worth 25-35 cents; demand good.

Peaches are coming heavy and ruling cheap—25 to 60 cents for Jerseys. Georgias are about done—$1 to $1.75 per crate. Delaware peaches are only fair in quality this year and rule from 40 cents up.

Apples are cheap—10 to 60 cents per basket. The quality is fair.

The best nearby corn is ruling around 60 cents, and from there the price drops to 25 cents. The quality is good.

Lima beans have a black eye, on account of large stock. The present price is $1 per one-third barrel baskets; demand fair.

Potatoes are selling at very low prices—17 to 20 cents per basket. The farmers complain because they cannot get 60 cents a basket in the country.

California Bartlett pears range from $1.25 to $1.75 per box. Lots of the receipts are poor and rough.

North Carolina grapes, Delaware variety, average $2 for the best, and a few black grapes which have started to come forward are bringing $1.50.

Nearby peppers are very cheap—10 cents per basket.

Cantaloupes are coming from everywhere—North Carolina, Delaware and Maryland, at $2.50 per crate for the best and 30 to 40 cents per basket for Jerseys. Colorado Rocky Fords will be along shortly.

They deny any intent to defraud the Government. If they are convicted they can be imprisoned for seven years and fined $26,000.

The New York State Retail Grocers' Association has been holding its annual meeting in Niagara Falls during the week, the meetings being held in the auditorium of the Shredded Wheat Co.

In his annual report, President William Geffery recommended that the association ask Congress to pass laws prohibiting the giving of all coupons, trading stamps, etc. One of the principal speakers was Fred. Mason, who was a former secretary of the National Association and is now vice-president and general manager of the Shredded Wheat Co. Walter B. Cherry, president of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association, also made an address, in which he said that he estimated that there were 156,000 retail grocers and 162,000 general stores in the United States.

On Wednesday practically the entire session was taken up with discussing the advocacy of an all-day Sunday-closing law. In many sections of this State grocery stores are open a part of Sunday and in some sections they are open all of Sunday.

On Thursday resolutions were adopted, including a request to manufacturers to stop the wholesaler selling to the consumer; protesting against any oleo law that may impose a tax on the retailer; endorsement of the Stevens bill before Congress; favoring the standardization of all containers for farm products; condemning the New York street railway and the charity organization for engaging in the retail grocery business; protesting against free public markets; amending the State pure food law; condemning trading stamps and gift enterprises, and favoring a uniform State law for hucksters and peddlers.

The following officers were elected: President, Urban F. Jehle, Buffalo; first vice-president, Philip De Puyt, Rochester; second vice-president, Henry Christgan; third vice-president, John Ziemann, Rome; secretary, Charles Thorpe, New York; treasurer, Walter J. Duncan, Lockport. Ithaca was chosen as the meeting place of the next convention.

The firm of F. H. Leggett & Co. is being incorporated in the State of New Jersey with a capitalization of $3,000,000. It asks in its application for charter for the power to do a "wholesale and retail" grocery business.

The annual meeting of the American Spice Trade Association was held in this city on Wednesday last. No business of serious importance was transacted.

The following officers were elected for 1915-16: President, William D. Weikel, Weikel & Smith Spice Co., Philadelphia; vice-president, George J. French, R. T. French Co., Rochester, N. Y.; treasurer, T. Greidanus, New York; secretary, John Clarke, of Messrs. John Clarke & Co., New York; directors to serve three years: Robert M. Littlejohn, L. Littlejohn & Co., New York.

The following members were designated to the Arbitration Committee: Eugene W. Durkee, Messrs. E. R. Durkee & Co., New York;

BURK'S Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

Which Is Right?

D'y'e know, I've been hitting up the road now for going on twenty-five years, and I don't know yet whether it's good policy for a salesman to load his customers up.

I used to think one way, then I got to thinking the other, and now I'm starting to get back again where I was in the first place, which was to think that it was good policy to load 'em up.

Understand, I'm thinking mostly of the salesman now. Whether it's good policy for the customer to let himself be loaded up—that's another tale.

When I first went out on the road and began to feel like I was at home, I'd sell a man all I could put over on him. Understand, I wouldn't lie to him or anything like that. I ain't ever done that, so help me, and I ain't ever going to. Don't pay, in the first place, and you can't ever get away with it in the second place, and it ain't decent in the third place. But I would work to get a big order out of him. If he was a one-case man, that wouldn't make a speck of difference—I'd sell him five cases if I could, and I often could. If he got stuck with the goods, then I'd fix it up the best way I could. Maybe sometimes I'd take the stuff back. Anyway, I'd get his order and let everything else take care of itself.

Now I can't honestly say that was a bad scheme for me. I had some fusses, sure I did, but I fixed 'em up. I never lost but one customer by that, and I didn't miss him much anyway because he couldn't talk to you without sprinkling you all over with spit and I used to get a bad cold every time I had to go in there.

But I got to thinking it over one day and I made up my mind that it was sort of hard luck to choke a customer up with stuff, just because you could, and I fixed it up with myself I wouldn't do it any more.

After that I sized my people up and if a customer was a one-case buyer, I'd sell him only one case, and even if he was willing to buy more, I'd argue with him and make him buy one. I've been called more kinds of a d. f. for that than you ever heard. My idea was not to do anything that would make me so I couldn't go back to a customer and expect the merry smile, and then I thought my customers would love me for looking out for 'em.

But it ain't worked out quite that way. To be sure, nobody gets sore at me for loading 'em up, but I ain't seen more than a bushel of love. Specially that kind of love that makes a customer give you the order in preference to another house that ain't so particular about loading its trade up. Honest to goodness, I can't put my finger on one case where another salesman and me were after an order, and where I got it because I looked after my trade by not loading 'em, and the other fellow didn't.

So now I ain't sure I wouldn't have done better by selling all the stuff and taking my chance with kicks afterward. I'll bet I'd a-sold more stuff and been just as well off with my trade as I am now. I think my trade think all right of me. They act like they did anyway. Some of 'em take me to their houses, if I happen to be cleaned up pretty fair, and them that don't, I know it's because I'm so blamed pretty they're afraid for their wives to meet me. Of course I don't blame 'em for that.

But thinking all right of a fellow, and giving him an order when there's a tenth of a cent to be saved by giving it to another fellow that you maybe don't think so well of—why that's two different things, I've found.

So here's about where I'm standing to-day: I've 'bout made my mind up that a salesman's got a right to sell a buyer all the goods he can sell him without doing any funny business. Of course a salesman that tells a customer he better buy big because he knows the market's going up next week, when he don't know anything like that—he's a plumb thief. He ought to go to jail or be tarred and feathered. That's what I mean by funny business. But I believe I've got a right to sell a one-case man five cases, by putting up a good argument, or giving him a bit of inducement, or a free deal or something like that, and if five cases is some load for him, why that's up to him. He ought to know what he can stand.

And as for loads, why they're the greatest things in the world. Carrying loads is the way your back muscles get developed.

California Trying New Method of Shipping Grapes East.

A new field for the shipping of California grapes has been opened by the recent experiment of sending a drum of Persian 21s to Chicago by local express without refrigeration, the grapes being packed in a drum filled with wood sawdust. According to received from Chicago the 30 pot grapes sold for $15. They arrived in good condition, and were the first of the season. The Chicago shipment from California consisted of 30 pounds of grapes carried, in addition to the weight of the drum and the sawdust, the total weight aggregating 50 pounds. The express to Chicago was $1.82.

323.—The First Indication of What the Courts Will Consider Unfair Competition Under Recent Laws.

It seems to me as if the entire trade of the United States were waiting for some court decision which will declare what is to be considered unfair competition under the two most recent anti-trust acts—the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Anti-Trust Act. The Federal Trade Commission Act, it will be remembered, prohibits “unfair competition,” but does not pretend to say what unfair competition shall be. The Clayton Act does name a few acts which are to be deemed monopolistic or unfair, but these for the most part are only generalizations, and the details will have to be worked out by the courts.

This gives special interest to a case which has just been decided in Indianapolis, Ind., involving most of the questions of monopoly and restraint of trade. The Government sued a large manufacturer of a certain store appliance, whose products are sold all over the United States. The charge was the use of oppressive methods destined to destroy competitors and restrain competition. The manufacturer decided not to defend the suit and allowed the court to enter a decree against him. I have just been sent a copy of this decree, which sets forth particularly what shall be considered unfair competition in this manufacturer's case. His case, however, will not be very different from many other cases.

The decree is handed down both under the Clayton and the Federal Trade Commission Acts, and is about the first detailed indication of the way the courts will look on various acts of competition. This particular court was the United States Court for the Indiana district.

As I regard the decree as of great importance, I reproduce from it the acts which the court said could no longer be legally done:—

From employing spies to get information regarding competitors' business by taking employment in the latters' factories, shops or offices.

From price cutting below cost of production and from discrimination in prices for the purpose of harming a competitor.

From bribing, hiring or employing architects, fire marshals, insurance representatives or municipal officers or employees to use their influence in promoting the sale of its own products or in preventing the sale of competitors' products.

From getting or trying to get cancellation of orders taken or of sales made by competitors or interfering in any way with contracts of competitors. The defendant company had, according to the complaint, what it called its “knockout squad,” a force of special salesmen whose duty it was to cause cancellation of competitors' contracts.

From making false representations to customers, real or prospective of competitors, concerning the standing or business methods of the competitors, with the intent to injure them in their business.

From bringing or threatening suit against competitors and their customers, real or prospective, on the assertion, known to be false or not believed in good faith to be well founded, that the products of competitors are an infringement of the patent rights of the defendant company.

From agreeing to indemnify customers, real or prospective, of competitors against loss if they cancel contracts with competitors.

From inducing or hiring draymen, railroad employees or other persons to obtain from shipments made by competitors or from other sources, the names and addresses of their customers; except that salesmen in reporting prospective customers on whom they have called, or employees engaged to make canvasses for the purpose of ascertaining the names and addresses of prospective customers, may report the name of the appliance owned by the prospect if the purpose is not to injure the competitor.

From inducing or hiring salesmen, agents or other employees of competitors to leave their employment to enter that of the defendant company. However, such change may be made if without inducement from the defendant company.

Readers will note that several acts are forbidden here which very many concerns are regularly doing to-day in the course of every-day business. I do not believe, however, that these acts would necessarily be illegal if done by any concern. The defendant manufacturer in this case is the largest producer in his line. He has no monopoly, but he might be said to have control. Therefore the standard which would be set for his acts would be much more rigid than the standard set for the smaller man who made a small fraction of the total output. For instance, a manufacturer making 1 per cent. of the total output in his line could do many things, and do them legally, that the dominant figure in the industry could not do at all. He could hire competitor's salesmen, for instance, without being guilty of unfair competition, although he might be liable to a civil suit by the employer whose salesmen he coaxed away. He could also, in my judgment, persuade customers to cancel orders given to competitors, though again there would be the chance of a civil

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

“Be Careful—Don't Crush.”—These words are printed on yellow strips of paper, an inch wide and six inches long. There should be a supply of them at the order department, the cake department, and particularly the fruit department. You paste one on top of a carrier of wrapped peaches, a bakery cake, or even a package of butter cut from the tub.

It prevents careless handling by owners of private cars and it saves many a package from mutilation to the delivery of your own stuff.

Besides—it suggests consideration, and consideration is service. It's a little thing, but it's one of those little things that impresses a patron favorably. It seems to go farther than the sign “Safety First.” It is more personal, more direct, more pleasing.

Getting Back a Customer.—The best of regulated stores will occasionally lose a customer, especially a busy store. A very good one was apparently lost or account of the checker allowing poor fruit to pass twice. Letter writing in such cases is no longer considered effective. The salesman that took the order was instructed to call at the house at 10 A. M.—the most favorable hour for business. He was to approach the lady somewhat after this manner: “The manager told me that you had withdrawn your business because you received fruit in poor condition the other day. It was I who took the order, and on me largely the amount of the responsibility rests, and I called to ask you if you would not be good enough to re-consider your decision and permit me in future to handle your orders. Our office records show you to be a valuable customer and one that we really cannot afford to lose.”

She wasn't lost. That tactful conversation brought her back and it is given here with the thought that some of you may have the same experience. Ask your manager to please withhold his letter until the heart-to-heart talk comes off.

“Give the World Your Best.”—Thus writes a new-thought author. How splendid it is to give the store “your best.” Mind you, it is no child's play to do this. It is a real man's job. To give the store your best needs a lot of self-discipline, mental and physical, and the easiest method of accomplishing this is simply to put yourself in your employer's place. No clerk, no salesman, no manager can measure up to the full standard of “best” until he or she fully realizes an absolute mutual interest. True, the profits are not yours, neither is the capital invested yours, nor the loss risked yours, nor other big responsibilities yours, but you are a cog wheel, and just as soon as that cog shows its defect the big driving wheel feels it. And remember this—the “best” in you is the easiest in you. Maybe not so to the 50 per cent. man, but to the one who believes in himself—in his sense of right, the solution of success is—Give the store your best.

for damages by the concern ing the order. It is one of the alties of greatness—that the al restrictions about one are ch tighter than those about one's aller competitors.

You Sell Corn Meal, Here Is Some Useful Informa- tion for You.

Government Finds That Old-fashioned Stone Ground Corn Meal, Though
Better Flavored Than the Roller Ground, Keeps Nowhere Near So Well. Some General Information on Corn Meal.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant
and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

August 5, 1915.

Investigations on the keeping qualities of cornmeal, recently completed by the experts of the Department of Agriculture, show that stone-ground meal, which on account of its rich oily flavor is so desired in the palatable muffin, hoe cake and pone, spoils much more quickly than meal made in the modern mill by the roller process. For this reason the stone-ground meal could be eaten as soon as possible after milling. In this respect it is like milk and cream which are usually consumed within a few hours after being produced, and which under the most favorable conditions can be kept in their natural state for only a short time. The roller mill meal is, in its keeping qualities, more like butter, which can with proper care be kept in good condition, not indefinitely, but for a reasonable length of time.

The palatable, characteristic taste of the stone-ground meal is largely due to the oil contained in the germ of the corn. As the whole kernel of corn is ground in the stone or French burr mill this oil is pressed out in the process and imparts its flavor to the meal. In the roller mill process the germ is taken from the corn before rolling by a machine called a degerminator, and but little of the oil gets into the meal. The germ, if allowed to remain in the meal, causes it to spoil quickly. So the very thing that imparts the desirable flavor to the meal will also injure its keeping qualities. In some cases in stone-ground meal the germ is removed by bolting after grinding. This improves the keeping quality over that of unbolted meal but does not make it equal in keeping qualities to the meal made by extracting the germ before milling.

The term "water-ground" meal applies to the product ground by stones without regard to whether the motive power is water, steam or electricity. At one time nearly all stone grinding mills were operated by water power while roller mills were usually operated by steam, and so the term "water-ground" was used to mean the same as "stone-ground." In latter years, however, steam and electricity have almost entirely displaced water as a motive power in mills. It is the milling machinery, and not the source of power, that determines the character of the meal that may be produced.

The keeping quality of cornmeal is also greatly affected by heat and moisture. Other things being equal, the drier the meal the longer it will keep. It is the custom in larger mills and in some smaller ones to artificially dry the meal after milling. In wet sections of the country, or in wet weather anywhere, dried meal will very quickly absorb moisture from the atmosphere.
Any kind of cornmeal will keep much longer in cold weather than in warm weather. It should, therefore, be stored in a dry, cool place.

Dear Sir:—Inclosed please find two lists recently put out. Kindly give us your opinion how we can improve them.

Yours truly,
H. S. GROVE.

Inclosed with this came a couple of cards $7\frac{1}{2} \times 14$ inches, one gray, the other manila, and printed on both sides. The cards are too small for the amount of matter which has been put on them—the side margins are hardly more than an eighth of an inch. This kills the appearance almost entirely—it looks like skimping. I am reproducing what I consider the best side of the best of the two circulars. It seems to have been used last April.

This is good advertising, and if kept up should without doubt produce business. It looks interesting and is interesting. The heading might have been a little snappier, and more in accord with the spirit of the introduction. "Some Fakes You Will Not Find Here" might have been a good heading. "Our April List" is a little tame.

One thing I admire in Mr. Grove—he is talking quality all the time and he doesn't hesitate to say that the cheap goods he is handling are merely cheap goods and if the buyer wants quality he will have to pay a higher price. I think perhaps he goes a bit too far in what he says. For instance, where he says, "We have coffee as low as $12\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound, but we cannot say it is good coffee." It might have been better to say it this way: "We have coffee as low as $12\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound, but of course it isn't equal to a higher priced coffee, though fine for the price." That would have left the people who were in a mood to buy it still in the mood to buy it, while telling them frankly that it isn't good would probably have the effect of sending them somewhere else for that price coffee. I certainly do admire, however, the spirit of frankness that runs clear through Mr. Grove's advertising. In order to Southern Wholesale Grocers Working for Cotton Sugar Bags.

President J. H. McLaurin, of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association, is again agitating the use of cotton bags in place of paper bags in the grocery trade; also cotton twine, as one means of helping the Southern cotton planters to get rid of some of their enormous crop of cotton. To that end Mr. McLaurin has issued a letter in which he says in part:—

The new cotton crop is facing the South. Last fall it was freely advocated in many quarters that in the interests of the trade life of this entire country the South's cotton acreage should be reduced 50 per cent. At the present time, nine months afterwards, it is reported from various sources that this acreage reduction ranges anywhere from 20 per cent. down to 10 per cent.

It seems safe to conclude that this country is going to have to take care of a large cotton crop during the coming season, together with whatever surplus we may carry over. Accordingly it behooves us to get interested now and not wait until next October.

Unquestionably the large majority of dealers and distributors in this country, and especially in the South, are most earnest advocates of the use of cotton bags, bagging, twine, and, indeed, the use and consumption of cotton in every conceivable way possible. We are very anxious in behalf of those interests affected by the consumption and marketing of cotton, to ascertain the extent to which our manufacturing friends throughout the United States are in sympathy with our interests in this question.

Will you kindly address this office on this subject, advising us what extent your institution is interested or can be of service, in the utilization of cotton? If your business calls for the use of bags or bagging are you using and advocating cotton? Are you not willing to communicate with your customers throughout the South, and, indeed, the country at large, and advise that unless otherwise instructed you will use cotton bags? (Last year many manufacturers wrote: "We will use cotton bags when specified.") Now let's reverse it and say, "We will use cotton bags unless otherwise specified."

Compel your customers to receive cotton bags or wrappings or else specify that they do not want it.

WARNING !

Don't let the $175 Window Dressing Contest pass you unless you have so much money you don't care to make a little more.

You may make $75 by doing a trifle of work, and you can't lose anything whether you make the $75 or not. Suppose you only make $10—the fifth prize—it's as if you found the money.

Now is the time—iced tea time.

The contest is for the five best window displays of Lipton's Tea. Here are the conditions:—

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes September 1, 1915.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Another Collection Agency Scheme Turned Inside Out Familiar "Guarantee" to Collect So Much. Familiar "Retainer Fee," Which Seems to Bring No Practical Return. A New Scheme to Refund Part of Retainer Fee, if Less Than That Much is Collected, Proves Plausible But Little More.

Now comes along another collection agency under the pretentious name of the "Commercial Liquidation Company," Title Guaranty Building, St. Louis, Mo. A Maryland subscriber sends in its contract, printed on fine bond paper with a green seal. These things are impressive, but how little they really mean:—

Frederick, Md., Aug. 10, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I am inclosing for your examination a contract of a collection agency in St. Louis, Mo. Will you please publish in your next issue your opinion and point out the flaws?

I inclose a stamped self-addressed envelope for the return of the contract.

Thanking you in advance, I am,
Yours truly,
F. V. STAUB.

The following is the contract:—

This certifies that.....
..... of
hereinafter designated as the client, has this date paid to the Commercial Liquidation Co. of St. Louis, Mo., hereinafter designated as the company, the sum of $15, retainer fee, for its services for a period of one year from date, which sum has this date been received and is hereby acknowledged, and the client agrees to place with the company for collection at least 30 present delinquent claims, legally due, with correct addresses, amounting to at least $250, all in accordance with the conditions hereinafter stated.

1. The company agrees, provided client will forward to the company at St. Louis, Mo., within three months from date, the claims as specified amounting to at least $250, to recover in cash or secured settlements from the claims as aforesaid, at least $60 during the period of this contract, or should the sum realized be less, but more than the retainer fee, the company will continue the contract in force for another year, and during said year accept for collection any additional claims as the client may forward without further expense, other than commissions on collections or settlements; or should the sum realized be less than the retainer fee, the company will repay and remit to the client, upon written demand, the difference between the amount which shall have been realized, and the amount paid for retainer, with 6 per cent. interest from date.

2. The company agrees, within 10 days from date, to furnish the client with a surety bond for $100, executed by the Lion Bonding and Surety Co., of Omaha, Neb., for the faithful performance of the guarantee contained in this contract.

3. The company agrees that it will use due diligence to collect the claims of the client, and will in good faith employ such lawful means, methods and procedure, as in their judgment, discretion and experience believe will effect collections or settlements, and when deemed necessary, look up transfers of property, deeds or assignments, investigate the surroundings and circumstances of debtors, or other matters that may bear on a case and aid in securing its adjustment.

4. The retainer and commissions are the only charges to be made by the company for services in effecting collections or settlements under this contract, and client will not be required to pay for court costs or attorney's fees in such action or proceedings as shall be instituted upon the advice of the company, except in special cases covering which mutually satisfactory arrangements shall have been agreed upon in advance.

5. The client agrees that on all collections or settlements effected, either direct to the client, or to the company, which are to be promptly reported by both parties, the company shall receive commissions as stated below.

6. All the obligations of the client to the company, and all the obligations of the company to the client, are fully set forth in this contract, and no soliciting or traveling representative of the company has any power or authority to make any other different contract for the company, either written or oral, or to modify or waive any of the terms or conditions of this contract.

This is not different from the average collection agency contract—neither better nor worse. The subscriber must first pay $15 as "retainer fee." This is gone, once it is paid. The agency doesn't have to show any result for it whatever. If anything is collected, the agency charges its regular commissions anyway, giving no credit for the retainer fee. Those commissions are: 25 per cent. of claims of $25 or less; 15 per cent. of claims of $25 to $100, and 10 per cent. of claims over $100. In every town, city or village there are lawyers who will be glad to accept accounts for collection at these rates, without any "retainer fee." And their service should be infinitely more efficient for they are on the spot and know the local law.

Much of the service which the agency agrees to perform is mush. It will use "due diligence" in collecting, and "when deemed necessary," and "in its judgment," etc., look up records, etc., but it does not say it will do these things for nothing though its contract appears to be worded with the idea of creating that impression. The customer need not pay court costs or attorney's fees, "except in special cases" where advance arrangements have been made to that effect.

It makes the old and foolish "guarantee" to collect $60, which is merely a guarantee to collect $60 or go on trying for another year, possible with the same lack of result. Of course there is nothing to that. If it collects less than the $15 retainer fee, it says it will pay back the difference between what is collected and the $15, with interest. This is very plausible but in reality it amounts to little. The customer must wait for a year to see about this, during which time the Commercial Liquidation Co. may itself liquidate. Moreover, its financial responsibility is not guaranteed and is quite unknown. The $100 bond by the Lion Bonding Co. is another unknown quantity. This latter concern, incidentally, is not even listed in the mercantile rating books as in Omaha. This part of the agreement we regard as of not the smallest practical value. If the agency collected, for instance, only $5, it would owe the subscriber under this agreement, $10. The subscriber is somewhere in the East, the agency is in Missouri and the bonding company is in Nebraska. If either or both refused on any pretext, or neglected, to pay the $10, there is no practical way in which it could be collected.

We believe the scheme of the "Commercial Liquidation Co." to be a poor one for anybody but itself. So far as we can see the subscriber gets no practical value for his $15.

Manufacturer's Sales Manager Tells Why He Thinks Jobbers Ought to Stand for Fixed Prices

E. F. Swan, of the Joseph Burnett Co., Boston, Mass., Makes Answer to the Recent Article of Walter A. Frey, Baltimore Jobber, on Price Maintenance.

With all due respect to Walter A. Frey, author of "Why I Am Fighting Price Maintenance," I believe he misses the vital point entirely.

Mr. Frey is a wholesaler of groceries. He simply buys and sells merchandise. I feel sure that he would not invest any money in any manufacturer's article if the brand were unknown to him or to his trade. He would wait until the manufacturer had, by advertising or in some other way, made it possible to sell the goods at a profit.

This alone substantiates the statement made by W. H. Ingersoll, that with the goods "the manufacturer delivered also the demand."

Mr. Frey evidently has no brand of his own on which he has to spend time and money in order to make it well known to the public; otherwise he would not say that the manufacturer delivers only the merchandise, retaining his good will and trademark rights.

Would Mr. Frey accept Welch's Grape Juice in plain bottles without the Welch label?

Could he make much headway trying to sell Welch's even though he knew it to be Welch's, unless Welch stamped each package with his name, thus by means of his trade-mark giving an insurance to the public?

Standard goods become such not because manufacturers call them standard, but because the public, by its continued patronage, prove them to be. And reputations are not bought by manufacturers, but are obtained only by consistently serving the public for years with merchandise that never fails. Having once passed a favorable judgment on a product which has been found satisfactory, the public content to pay the price the manufacturer says it is worth.

There can be no objection to Mr. Frey's selling other than well-known brands at any price he chooses. In fact, he could easily find some manufacturer who will give him goods with his own name on them and Mr. Frey can give them away if he chooses. But what he wants is the use of some reputable name which will aid him in creating the impression in the trade that this is a big factor and he will use the names of only such manufacturers as have made a market for their goods by years of faithful service to the public.

Mr. Frey states that the manufacturer who starts a campaign of advertising is aided by the merchant who is willing to sell the product at a low percentage of profit. The product is thus put into the hands of the consumer at a lower price, the consumer uses more of it, and thereby the manufacturer's sales are increased.

Is it possible that such a fallacy can exist in the mind of anyone, particularly a wholesale grocer?

How many times in the experience of Mr. Frey have specialty men called on him, asking permission to sell the trade through his name? Suppose the request has been granted and the work done by every retail customer has been

How many times has Mr. Frey said to the specialty salesman, "Now that you have sold all my goods, what they will need for 90 days, there will be no necessity of playing in very much stock." If the salesman had sold twice as much, would it not take twice as long before the repeat orders came?

Why does not this same argument apply to the consumer? If a package lasts a week and the regular price is 10 cents, would 10 packages for 15 cents make that the consumer use more of the goods?

Further, in the ordinary course of events, would it not take twice as long to use them? And meanwhile, the process was repeated often enough, would not the consumer gradually be led to think that the regular price was two for 15 cents?

Under this condition was brought out, the profit made by Mr. Frey could be curtailed and he would be one of two things—either ask the manufacturer to make a better product or hunt around for some similar goods to sell in substitution for the line that had been introduced only by the manufacturer with no expense for selling on the part of Mr. Frey.

The Sherman anti-trust law takes entire care of the possible manufacturers' trust that Mr. Frey speaks of. Mr. Frey admits that well-advertised goods are the easiest sold. But he is wrong in stating that the profit is much less than on poorly advertised goods. The profit on a well-advertised article must be at least satisfactory or the trade generally will do its best to retard the sales. The article that is poorly advertised or not advertised at all and which is sold on the "just-as-good-as-the-advertised brand" basis can be sold cheaper because it has little or no reputation to maintain.

In the face of such facts as I have cited above, why does Mr. Frey want to curtail his profits still more by cutting the price on standard goods, the profits on which are already too small to please him, and why does he not handle only unknown lines so that he could sell at any price that pleased him and make as much as he thinks he ought to make?

Mr. Frey's illustration, in which Smith's soap figures, if followed by Smith, would soon put Mr. Frey out of business. If Mr. Frey bought a carload of Smith's soap at $3.40 a box, he would expect to sell the one-box buyer at $4.25. What would happen to Mr. Frey's profits on Smith's soap if Mr. Smith found enough one-box buyers to make a total purchase of the whole 500 boxes at one time? Does not Mr. Frey know that this is being done now, much to the discomfort of the jobbing trade?

Mr. Frey feels sorry for the New York jobber who pays $3.40 for an article that is sold in Baltimore at a delivered price of $3.40, the freight, 10 cents, being absorbed by the manufacturer. If this protection was not afforded Mr. Frey, and if manufacturers are not allowed to establish a resale price on their goods, Mr. Frey would do well not to go into the manufacturing business, for no sooner would he establish the fact that Frey's meant value in the goods than there would come someone looking at things from the same viewpoint as does Mr. Frey now, and away would go the work of years of conscientious service on the part of Mr. Frey.

Do You Sell Wheatena People?

Every grocer doesn't sell Wheatena—that's better for you than if everybody sold it.

The grocer who caters to the very cheapest people often doesn't sell it because Wheatena is usually used by a different class of people. Wheatena is distinctively a genteel food, not because we intended it for any special class in the beginning, but because it seemed to find its own niches.

Wheatena is the hearts of selected wheat, unusually packed and unusually guaranteed.

WITH THE EDITOR

Here is a letter received during the week, upon which we wish to

Writing One's Own
Advertising. say something about originality in advertising:—

Waynesboro, Pa., August 9, 1915.
To the Editor.

Kindly advise me where I can get some advice on advertising for a cash store. I would like to have a mailing list to mail to my customers and those that I think should be circularized. I have only been in the business two years and have not done any advertising at all and am doing very well, but feel as though I could increase my business if I had some good advertising matter to mail out the first of each month in plain envelopes, with a 2-cent stamp.

Kindly advise by mail where I could get some help in the line I need.

Yours truly,
C. A. DECKER.

We believe Mr. Decker, and any other merchant who thinks he can get good results from ready made advertising, is on the wrong track, and if he continues it long enough, will eventually conclude that "advertising does not pay." Mr. Decker evidently believes that he can buy some advertising out of some professional ad. writer's stock, which he can send out to his own list. This he thinks will save him the trouble of writing the matter himself, and it may be written better than he could write it. All this may be true, but whether that kind of advertising will bring him any business is another question. We would willingly wager it would not. We have seen a very large number of stock advertising schemes, similar to what Mr. Decker has in mind, and we have never seen one that had any real red blood in it.

We commend to Mr. Decker the writing of his own advertising. No matter if he isn't fluent or grammatical—let him persist and in time he will become so. But even if he does not, the advertising he writes will be his. It will bear the stamp of his own originality, and for that reason it will have more force in a minute than the best of the ready made stuff can have in its whole life. We believe it is axiomatic that the most brilliant man in the advertising business, with no first hand knowledge of the people for whom he is writing, or working at a distance from those people, cannot write as good advertising as the crudest merchant-amateur who is on the spot, and who writes for his own neighbors. And this is doubly true if the professional is supplying the same stuff to a dozen or a hundred clients.

The man of energy and ambition who joins the service of the United States Govern-

Maddening Governmental Delays. ment and starts in to make things move, must go wild with rage and impatience at the everlasting sluggishness with which things go. Nothing seems to move with quickness and dispatch—long after an individual would have finished the work, washed up and gone home, the Government lumbers in, with its stunt under its arm, sometimes very poorly done, though the doing of it has consumed about twice as much time as it should.

These perhaps irritable remarks are inspired by the receipt of another number of the "Service and Regulatory Announcements" issued by the Department of Agriculture, being the reports of cases brought under the Federal Food and Drugs Act. These reports always have been greatly behind hand, but some time ago the Secretary wrote this paper and said that an effort was being made to improve the system.

Judging from the August 5th number of the Bulletin the system has not yet been improved. Perhaps it is too early to expect it, since only something like ten months have elapsed. In the August Bulletin there are about fifty cases reported, most of them based on sales made in December, 1914, and not contested. In other words, the Government, having previously made its analysis, seizes or prosecutes certain goods for violating the food act in December, 1914. The owner or packer does not contest—the Government has it all its own way. Adulteration or misbranding is proven and a certain article, selling generally in the market, has been proven illegal. The Federal food act directs that public announcement of this fact shall then be made, so that any one concerned will be warned.

Nine months after the Government has all necessary information in its possession, it finds time to give the warning. In the name of everything reasonable, why should such an important matter be so delayed?

When it was proposed to pass a law in Pennsylvania requiring all commission merchants to obtain a license from the State to do business, and provide an indemnity bond, there were loud cries that the act would be unconstitutional and would speedily be overthrown by the courts, thus putting everybody to useless trouble and expense. As far as conditions in one State can bear upon conditions in another, these opinions appear to have been proven wrong by a high court decision in Washington. The law there went further than the proposed Pennsylvania act; in that it not only required the license and the indemnity bond, but it restricted the commission merchant's commissions to 10 per cent. This act has been declared not to be class legislation, but to be sound law. It would be a splendid thing—for shippers—if we had such a law in Pennsylvania. The commission business is the easiest business to steal in that exists to-day, thanks to the loose way in which shippers send goods to even Tom, Dick and Harry, and there is never a minute when some commission merchant isn't stealing.

Read in another column what the retailers of St. Louis, Mo., are trying to do to stop the returned goods nuisance, and then reflect, you there are grocers, how fortunate you are to largely escape this burden that retailers in other lines must bear.

The Cost of Returned Goods. The returned goods are a nuisance, and they reflect, you there are grocers, how fortunate you are to largely escape this burden that retailers in other lines must bear.

The St. Louis retailers are trying to get consumers that after a certain date goods once sent home cannot be returned except under sharp restrictions. Some articles cannot be returned at all, and none can be returned if kept longer than thirty days (the Philadelphia department stores allow two weeks). Will it plan work? Not unless competition is milder, and the St. Louis retailers of a different calibre, than other markets. In most of the large cities competition has forced large retail stores to do things that would make the old-time merchant turn in their graves. In the stores, as the head of a department said to the writer only the other day, "you never know if a thing is sold until it is paid for." Goods are sent home in great profusion, be examined, discussed, compared. The customer exercises his free judgment, not in the store, but at his own home. The expense of carting out and carting back is frightful; of course it is all charged up. The consumer pays, but fortunately, the expense is distributed among all the customers, instead of being born by those who incur it. From the consumer's standpoint, all this makes shopping very delightful—very free, very comfortable, very satisfactory. It costs.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Mr. Newton F. Cressman, who has for years been connected with the Philadelphia Lawn Mower Co., Philadelphia, Pa., died suddenly last Sunday. Mr. Cressman was well known to the trade and was universally liked. He will be missed.

A meeting of the creditors of P. F. Brown & Co., bankrupt butter and egg jobbers, was held on Wednesday to discuss the offer to pay 10 per cent. in cash and 20 per cent. in notes payable in 6, 12, 18 and 24 months respectively. Most of the creditors accepted, but there was some opposition, and nothing definite was done. The meeting adjourled for thirty days. The receiver will ask for authority to continue the business for sixty days longer.

The annual picnic of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association at Willow Grove Park last Wednesday, was the highly successful affair that it usually is. More than 600 members, which included the Frankford Association, attended, and with their wives and clerks and their friends, there was a huge crowd. All association meetings and many more were closed that day. There were the usual sports and a baby parade. The singing and athletic programmes were planned and carried out by William Douglass, J. S. Althouse, C. Smith, A. J. Heidman, J. P.

You Wish to Know More About the Grocery Business, Here is a Course of Study

Powering the Ambitious and Praiseworthy Inquiry From a Manager Who Would Like to Know His Business Better, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Gives Outline of the English Certificated Course.

There is a letter and the answer which should interest every reader who is ambitious to increase his knowledge of the grocery business:

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 10, 1915.
The Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have read all the English examination questions you have published and have been greatly interested in same.

In answer to the question you sometimes ask, "How many of these questions could American grocers answer?" I say I personally could not answer one-tenth. And I pride myself on knowing something about the grocery business. I believe something like the English Institute would probably pay in this country.

Could you supply your readers with the course of study used in the English Institute? It might prove helpful to those wishing to perfect themselves in the branches pertaining to the grocery business.

Yours truly,

NORMAN R. GREEN, Manager.

The following is the outline of the course which must be studied by candidates for a certificate as a qualified grocer from the English Institute of Certificated Grocers:—

Why Imperator Will Outsell

There may be other head rice about as fancy as Imperator, but it's apt to be coated with talc and glucose, while Imperator is uncoated. Take this as almost a guarantee:—that you will sell more Imperator rice than you will sell of any other brand, first because it's natural, second because it's exceedingly high grade.

Imperator and its idea make fine window display material.

Announcing

to the grocery trade the enlarge plans and policies of the California Associated Raisin Company for the promotion and increased sale of

SUN-MAID RAISINS and CALIFORNIA RAISIN BREAD

Made with Sun-Maid Raisins

This is the first of a series of advertisements appearing in this magazine. Their purpose is to acquaint you with our great National Campaign which will take place during the coming year commencing in August. This campaign, briefly, will consist of numerous plans to increase the consumption of Sun-Maid Raisins. But the most important consideration—so far as you are concerned—is that Raisin Bread will also be featured—creating a double demand among your customers.

So this campaign is really of primary benefit to you, for you will make the profit on the bread in addition to that on Sun-Maid Raisins. Your baker will supply you with California Raisin Bread. We have set the wheels in motion in the Bakery trade.

Greater Profit Ahead for YOU.

Glance for a minute at the first page advertisement appearing in the national magazines, reproduced in the upper right-hand corner (about one-sixth actual size). Think of the influence a whole series like this will have on American housewives—your customers.

Then let us hint at some other features—such as local newspaper advertisements, window displays, etc., which are available for your use if you merely join us in the great plans we lay before you.

Remember this country-wide campaign is to be handled in a big way—not in one section but nationally. People in your own town will be systematically approached—not one time and in one way—but many times and in several ways, so that your store will be identified with a big national movement to popularize raisins and raisin bread.

Never Before Any Effort Like This

This is bound to be the biggest and most effective sales campaign ever carried out for American grocers. Nothing has ever been so complete—nothing so carefully strategized. This big drive will surprise even you as it comes out. You will say that this campaign has won for you additional business and new profits. Of course the grocers who see the possibilities and begin to cash in on the energy and expenditures back of this campaign will receive the largest return. So even though this campaign will have its own tremendous force, you can get the greatest benefit from it if you become an active part of it.

This is merely the first page of one of the new series of advertisements. It appears in the Saturday Evening Post on August 28th and in the Ladies' Home Journal in September. Remember this is but ONE of a big series. Every housewife who buys food for the household will receive the message about Sun-Maid Raisins and California Raisin Bread in the months commencing with August. Consider the number of people who will read these advertisements. And think of the other ways we will use to make raisins part of every meal.

Bear in mind, too, that this is merely ONE form of raisin advertising. Every housewife will be reached to through every effective channel.

Nation-Wide Advertising Campaign

Later we will announce more in detail the scope of this unprecedented advertising campaign. We want you to know all about it, so you can be prepared to meet the demand created. But we merely want you to know when it commences and to assure you of its power. This advertising campaign will be backed by an intensive sales campaign—the like of which has never yet been known. Never before has there been such a campaign to give you a double demand like this. We help you to sell bread. We help you to sell package raisins.

Millions Will Want Raisins and Raisin Bread

When this great force is let loose, you will be affected. Besides an increase in package sales you will be able to build up a new and profitable business on raisin bread, for this plan has been tried for months. Thousands have been consulted. Experiments and investigations have been made. The sole purpose, remember, has been to build up an every-day demand. We advise you to immediately prepare for this campaign by familiarizing yourself with every detail.

How to Capitalize on This Big Idea

The first thing to do is to write us at once for our plans to help you. Then study them. Then signify your intention of taking advantage of this opportunity. We will immediately give you all the information and keep you posted as to every move. We will explain all we are going to do to increase raisin demand and consumption. Prepare now for your share of the profits by writing at once, or sending the attached coupon.

Send me at once details of the national campaign about to start in which Sun-Maid Raisins and California Raisin Bread are featured.

More Discussion Over State's Scheme to Break Apple Prices by Public Markets. Apple Men Protest. State Will Try to Sell Retailers Over Commission Men's Head. Chain Five-and-Ten Cent Stores in Difficulties. Talk of Sugar Syndicate to Advance Prices. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, August 13, 1915.

In a recent issue some mention was made of a plan of John J. Dillon, Commissioner of the New York State Department of Foods and Markets, to maintain fruit markets in this city to be operated by the State and patronized by retailers. The markets would take the place of the commission merchants.

During the week the wholesale fruit dealers and commission men have issued a very radical statement, in which they call the proposed plan paternalism in its worst form, and declare that it is exceedingly unfair to the established commission merchants.

The plan is expected to do the following things:—

1. To reduce the usual commission charges from about 10 per cent. to around 5 per cent.
2. To eliminate extra charges, such as 6 cents a barrel for cartage, for goods shipped to this city.
3. To sell fruit cheaper to the consumer.
4. To pay higher prices to the consumers.
5. To obviate the uneconomic and unwieldy system of marketing fruit through the commission houses, giving a profit to several middlemen.
6. To supply fruit in a shorter time to the consumer and in a fresher condition.
7. To return checks for sales immediately to the shipper.

And the Commissioner declared it to be necessary for the following reasons:—

1. That the local commission men handle Western apples instead of New York fruit, though the latter is a superior product.
2. That local dealers manipulate the market after they have obtained control of the output each autumn, by means of which they pay low prices to the growers and exact abnormal prices from consumers.
3. That local dealers have not given the farmers "an honest price" for their fruit. They pointed out the sentence in the bulletin which describes the auction markets and says: "For the first time in the history of the State apple shippers will be sure of a square deal in the New York market."

It is not believed likely that the opposition of the trade will prevent the opening of the markets. Where the retailer comes in is shown by the following extract from the State

Apple Bulletin, which was issued a short time ago:—

The Department purposes to increase the consumption of State apples in the New York city market by canvassing the retail trade and influencing the retailers to keep a constant supply of State apples on sale at reasonable prices and to make a proper display of them. Attractive illustrated signs will be furnished the retailers to advertise New York State apples.

The American Five-and-Ten-Cent Stores, Inc., which has a number of stores in New York and other States, is fighting the attempt to put it in the hands of a receiver. It claims that it is solvent, but admits that it has debts of $200,000 which it cannot immediately pay. The United States Court has allowed it to file a bond for $30,000, and to continue business for the time being. Practically it amounts to appointing the company a receiver for itself, under bond. The decree was handed down preventing anybody from suing it at the present time. A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the company.

Advices from the fruit centers of the State predict a decline of about 50 per cent. in the apple crop of New York State. Last year the crop was 72 per cent. of normal. In 1913 it was 61 per cent. of normal, and this year it is expected to be about 48 per cent. of normal, which means 20,800,000 bushels in 1915, as against 49,600,000 bushels last year.

There has been considerable talk on the street during the week about an alleged syndicate formed in this city to co-operate with foreign operators for the purpose of carrying about 100,000 pounds of raw and refined sugar at a valuation of $7,000,000, the object of which would be to steady and control the market. The recent advance of about a half cent in raws is said to be the result of this arrangement. It is certain that some secret speculation or manipulation of the market is going on, for that could be the only cause for such a radical advance in raw sugar in the short time.

Up to this time nothing has been gained to Carter, Macy & Co., tea people, on account of their victory over the Government as to the admission of artificially colored teas. The Government is still using the Read test which Carter, Macy & Co. objected to and is still excluding all artificially colored tea under that test. The Government will appeal the case and the status will remain unchanged until the appeal is decided.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea steady to firm. Larger arrival of India-Ceylons little influence on prices.—Coffee heavy and dull, and weaker on account of large receipts in Brazil. Milds quiet and unchanged; price basis low.—Sugar much firmer. Raws advanced about a half cent; refined 15 points. Demand quiet.—Future apricots much stronger on foreign demand. Prunes and all other dried fruits quiet and unchanged. Future prunes a trifle easier.—Spot salmon unchanged, steady to firm in most quarters. Some sellers willing to shade. Domestic sardines slightly higher.—Canned vegetables dull with the tone easy except as to corn.—Provisions weak and quiet.—Wheat firmer on increased foreign buying.—Flour firm at an advance of about 10 cents over price recently ruling.

War Raises Canadian Living Cost.

The annual report of the Canadian Department of Labor, which has just been issued for the calendar year 1914, shows the range of commodity prices during that period as affected by the war. The chief increases for the year as a whole appeared in the grain and fodder groups, which rose 14 per cent., animals and meats 6 per cent., woollens 8 per cent., hides 10 per cent. and drugs and chemicals 7 per cent. Raw furs declined 33 per cent., fuel and lighting 6 per cent. and cottons 5 per cent. Food prices returned to the high rates that prevailed in the latter part of 1911 and first part of 1912. Meats were on a high level throughout the year, but showed much weakness in the last three months of 1914. An appendix to the report gives the average retail prices of some 32 articles of food and of coal, wood and coal oil, and the rent of a typical workingman's dwelling in each locality of the Dominion having a population of 10,000 or more for each year since 1910. The average weekly expenditure of a typical family of five for food was $7.73 in 1914, as compared with $7.33 in 1913 and 1912, $7.13 in 1911 and $6.95 in 1910. Meat, bread, flour and sugar averaged higher last year than in 1913. Rent averaged $4.65 a week, as compared with $4.75 in 1913, $4.60 in 1912 and $4.05 in 1911 and 1910. The department index number (which includes 272 commodities) stood at 136.1 for 1914, compared with 135.5 for 1913 and 134.4 for 1912, these numbers being percentages of the average prices prevailing during the decade 1890-1899, the period adopted by the department as a basis of comparison. The point reached in September last, namely, 141.3, was the highest recorded since 1890.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Among the sufferers from the Erie flood were the following directory of the Erie Commercial Club: P. L. Leemhuis, F. C. Richardson, J. Ross Mayer and G. L. Flood.

George H. Bausman, secretary of the St. Clair Association, has been elected a delegate to the Meadville convention.

Mr. Smedley will address the Williamsport grocers at their outing on August 18th at Indian Park.

Mr. Smedley is down for an address at Lakeside Park, Mahanoy City, on August 19th, the occasion being the district convention of the merchants of Schuylkill County.

The Mutual Retail Grocers' Association of Philadelphia held a picnic at Maple Grove Park on Tuesday, August 3d.

Cresson merchants have invited Mr. Smedley to address them. Date now being arranged.

A. A. Woods, secretary of the Butler Association, will address the meeting of secretaries at Meadville on "Co-operation."

Credit associations have been formed at Homestead and Duquesne.

All roads lead to Exposition Park, near Meadville. The State convention of retail merchants will meet there September 6th to 9th inclusive.

Every merchant in the State would profit by attending the convention.

It is a business convention for business men. The topics to be discussed are live ones. There will be good speakers, men who know their business, and who can tell you things you should know.

There should be an attendance of 1,000. An invitation is extended to every merchant to be present. No matter whether you are identified with an association or not, come. There will be a great forward work started at this meeting. Business evils exist through lack of organization—the remedy is organization. The State organization has done good, big work—it can do more. Will you, Mr. Merchant help?

Are you getting all the business you are entitled to?

Do you know that you are losing profitable business?

Your own regular customers do not buy all their groceries of you. Some of these are going elsewhere for their tea and coffee, salt, flour, soap, etc.

If you could get all their trade, Mr. Merchant, you could double your business.

You know that.

How can you find out just where this business is going?

We can help you find out.

As a part of our service to merchants who stock and push goods containing United Profit Sharing Coupons, we have prepared a TRADE DISSECTIFIER, a plan whereby you can ascertain for yourself how much profitable business you are losing.

Palatable Tidbits From a Winter Short Course on Retail Merchandising

Some of the Best Things From a Course of Lectures Which the Jobbers and Manufacturers of Sioux City, Iowa, Gave the Retail Trade of That Section.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained, through the courtesy of the Tolerton & Warfield Co., Sioux City, Iowa, a stenographic report of the winter short course of lectures to retailers which the jobbers and manufacturers of Sioux City recently gave the retail trade. The lectures were all on some phase of the question of merchandising, and many of them were exceedingly helpful and interesting. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has made a considerable number of extracts and will present them from time to time in tabloid form.—Ed.]

Let us consider for a moment what it costs you to carry accounts on your books for various periods of time. The experience I am going to give came from a merchant who asked me if I could suggest a remedy. This man's gross accounts on his books amounted to $4,883.24, divided approximately as follows:—

Two hundred dollars four years old; $500 three years old; $500 two years old; $500 one year old; $500 six months old; $1,000 three months old; $1,683 current accounts.

Now suppose money is worth 6 per cent. a year. In this instance we have $200 for four years, $48 or 24 per cent.; $500 for three years, $90 or 18 per cent.; $500 for two years, $60 or 12 per cent.; $500 for one year, $30 or 6 per cent.; $500 for six months, $15 or 3 per cent.; $1,000 for three months, $15 or 1½ per cent.; a total interest of $258.

This shows you what it cost that merchant in interest alone to carry those accounts for that length of time. Those are the actual figures from a merchant who is fairly prosperous, and a fairly typical merchant of the Northwest.—By H. K. Zuppinger, who spoke on "Retail Credit."

Many grocers send back goods they buy. Here is a grocer who has bought goods from a jobber. We will say he owes the jobber $100 for groceries and the time has come to pay that $100. He is a little short of money just at that time, but he has three or four dozen cases he does not particularly need at that time, and he takes those extra cases and dumps them back on the jobber. I am told such things as that are frequently done. I don't believe that is a fair proposition; I don't believe it is fair to the jobber.

I am inclined to think most merchants carry more stock than they ought to carry; I believe you ought to do business with less stock on hand. I believe it is possible for you to do business and make the jobber your warehouse. Let the jobber carry your goods. The majority of the men here this afternoon could buy goods and have them delivered from the jobber with very little more time than is required to send to their own warehouse and bring the goods up. There is lots of money invested in the goods piled in the warehouse. How much more money do you make by buying in an extra quantity? Not enough to pay. Make the jobber your warehouse and have him carry the stock of goods. Let him be responsible for the price going up or down, and when you need goods buy them. I believe the man who carries a small stock and turns his goods over often is the man who makes the most money.

There is one thing I have discovered in buying in ones or dozens. Suppose you are buying something that costs you 75 cents a dozen, and you sell a dozen every month. You sell that dozen for $1 and then you pay 75 cents and sell it for $1. At the end of the year you have turned that 75 cents over twelve times, making 25 cents every time; in other words, you have made $3 on an investment of 75 cents. A specialty man comes along and says you are paying too much money for those goods. I can sell you that same article for $6 a gross. You say, "That is easy. I will take a gross." So you put in the gross. You sell twelve a month, and at the end of the year you have sold the whole gross and you have made $6. In other words, you made $6 on a $6 investment, or 100 per cent. The other way you made $3 on a

75-cent investment, and you made 400 per cent. Would it not be better to use that $6 along a number of lines? Six dollars would carry twelve 75-cent lines, and if you could do that on all the twelve lines and let the jobber be your warehouse, would not you make more money?—By H. O. Roberts, who spoke on "Returned Goods."

I come to you as a representative of the newest of the professions, and that is the profession of electrical engineering. This has not been recognized as a profession more than about ten years. It is made up of men from the various other professions chiefly. A large portion of the work of the electrical engineer in times past was the supplying of power for lighting systems; so what I have to say will be from the engineering standpoint very largely. Some of the things, of course, will be from the standpoint of the retail merchant, but it will be from the angle of the engineer rather more than from the angle of the merchant.

When you go to select a store, do you go on the back street where you get the cheapest rent? If you have good sense you will not, unless you are dealing in some line that is demanded by the people on the back street. You get a store, if you can, on the most prominent street in town, where you have to pay the highest rent. What is the reason for that? You say, I want a lot of people to come to my store, and on the prominent street that is where the people go past. All right—and they go past, perhaps, and you don't get them. That is the trouble that is worrying a lot of people—that the prospective customers go right past. Why? They go past because you don't have decent show windows; and you pay your rent, not for so much space, but because you can put show windows there that attract the people. We are renting show window space, when we get a store on a prominent street. You go and rent the second floor of a building and see how much less the rents are, unless they are for office rooms. What is the difference? Why, the show windows. So your high rents on your prominent streets are paid for the sake of show windows.

If that is the case, why not have a show window that is worth the while? You may say, let us not light our show window at night. The electric man has been around for a contract to light it at night; of course, he wants to get all the windows to light that he can, but I will take what he says with a grain of salt. That was all right ten years ago, but not to-day. Why? Because to-day we have the moving picture show. You may not think the moving pictures have any relation to the show windows, but they do. We also have our business streets lighted better than ten years ago. Make a count of the people who go by your show window any night, and then when you get back home, close your eyes and think how that street looked ten years ago. The streets were rather dark, there were no moving picture shows, and the people stayed home nights. Now they are on the streets.

There is a difference between the night and day crowds. The day crowds are hurrying to the office or home to supper; the night crowds saunter along the streets to see what can be seen. They are going to the moving pictures. Yes, but any time will do, so they look at John Smith's window to see what they can see. So it is necessary that you should have your store window lighted.—By Arthur H. Ford, who spoke on "Window Lighting."

Change in Federal Retail Oleo Regulations.

Commissioner of Internal Revenue Osborn issued during the week the following modification of the oleomargarine regulations relating to the marking and branding of retail packages of oleomargarine put up by retail dealers to fill bona fide orders:—

The delivery by retail dealers in oleomargarine of retail packages which bear the marks and brands required by law and regulation after actual sale or to fill bona fide orders previously received, is permissible, provided the name or initials and the street address of the customer for whom the particular package is put up at the place of business of the retail dealer, appear thereon in addition to the retail marks and brands prescribed for such packages.

The preparation of retail packages to be kept on hand or sent out in wagons in advance of sale or orders therefor, or where bona fide orders have not been received for such goods, or fictitious names and addresses appear thereon, is in violation of the law and regulations, and such retail packages whenever thus found separated from the original stamp packages are subject to seizure and forfeiture and the dealer so offending is liable to prosecution for violation of Section 6, Act of August 2, 1886, and the regulations made thereunder.

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. The National Biscuit Company Make Nabiscos.

Swengel, Pa., August 9, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you please inform us through your columns as to whether the National Biscuit Co. manufacture their "Nabisco" wafers, and if not, who are the manufacturers?

We just had an argument with an independent bakery company's salesman, who claimed that their concern owns the only machine in this country in which these wafers can be produced.

Respectfully yours,
W. L. BURD & Co.

Nabisco wafers are made by the National Biscuit Co. itself.

Keeping the Brine of Olives.

Adamstown, Pa., Aug. 12, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—How can olives be kept so that the brine does not turn quickly? We keep them in the buckets they come in, loose lid, and the brine turns in two days. We make new brine, but this is troublesome.

Yours truly,
H. F. SNADER & Co.

The white scum that forms on the brine does not affect the olive in the least; it is merely unsightly. The brine is otherwise unpleasant. It may be the fault of the salt used. Use table salt. When the solution will float an egg, the proper amount of salt has been used.

Who Knows About the Autovacuum Refrigerating Machine?

Fort Pierce, Fla., Aug. 8, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly advise as to the efficiency of the Autovacuum Refrigerating Machine as compared with the York and others.

This is put out by the Autovacuum Refrigerating Co., 1113 Peoples Gas Building, Chicago, Ill.

For your convenience I am enclosing a self addressed envelope.

Thanking you in advance for a prompt reply, we are,

Very truly,
INDIAN RIVER PROVISION CO.,
John Powers.

We have made some investigation of the Autovacuum Refrigerating Machine, but have not been able to learn much about it. None of the refrigeration authorities in this territory ever heard of it. It does not seem to be advertised in any of the leading trade journals in the refrigerating line. We should hesitate to take on a machine that was not even known in a market like Philadelphia, which is a refrigeration centre. The compression and absorption methods are the favored methods. If you are contemplating buying a machine, ask the concern mentioned to give you the names of some of its users and then write to them. If they name anybody in this section, we will send a representative to interview such persons.

Scales, Coffee Mills and Caddies.

All respectable grocers and butchers deal with H. F. Heacock, of 51 N. Second street. Any one who needs a good, reliable scale, coffee mill or caddy, knows that Mr. Heacock gives the best stock and respectful treatment.

The same thing is true when one wants to repair an old scale or coffee mill and make it like new. There is no better place in Philadelphia than Mr. Heacock's. All scales are guaranteed to pass the sealers of weights and measures inspection.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. The market is high and firm, but whether it will continue to be during the next few months is an unknown quantity. Certainly, from the standpoint of the holder, the present situation is very satisfactory. No changes or developments have taken place during the week.

Coffee.

The coffee market has continued weak and all grades of Rio and Santos are probably an eighth cheaper for the week. This makes a total decline in two weeks of about $\frac{1}{4}$ cent. The cause of the weakness in Brazils appears to be the situation in Brazil itself. The supply of coffee is increasing down there and it can neither be shipped to Europe nor borrowed upon in Europe. The result is a comparative glut which is having its effect upon markets all over the world. Whether prices will go still lower depends upon whether the Brazilian holders are going to be able to extricate themselves. If the European embargo is taken off coffee, and they let coffee in there, the situation will improve very quickly. If this does not happen, the chance is that the market will go still lower. The demand is for wants only. Mild coffees show no change for the week. They are already very cheap indeed, and could hardly go much lower. Mocha is gradually working down and probably a half cent decline can be reported for the past week. Java is scarce and strong.

Sugar.

The sugar market, both raw and refined, has taken a radical advance during the week. Raws have advanced about a half cent a pound, due mainly to the fact that the entire Cuban supply is in a few strong hands in New York. It is said that their intention is to make some extra money between this and the middle of September when the domestic beet sugar crop will come upon the market. As a result of the advance in raws refined has also advanced from ten to twenty points, with a very firm market at this writing. Some refiners have even withdrawn entirely. Of course the future of the refined market will depend upon future raws, and this will be affected to some extent by the low price of all granulated, which is being offered almost over the entire East (as far as Bethlehem, Pa., and Trenton, N. J.) at as low as 5.45. The consumptive demand for sugar is poor.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is dull at ruling prices. Sugar syrup steady to firm; unchanged and in fair demand. Molasses unchanged and dull.

Fish.

Norway mackerel is firm. Some little mackerel is coming over from Norway, but the supply is not large there, and is said to be pretty nearly exhausted. The available stocks in this country are also said to be low. Prices are not advanced for the week, but it is harder to buy in small lots at last week's prices. Irish and shore mackerel show no change in price and are figuring very little. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and their season has not yet opened. No prices have been named up to the present time. Salmon is unchanged on last week's basis, the situation being firm on account of short catch reports. Spot salmon is steady to firm. Domestic sardines have advanced about 10 cents per case, due to alleged short supply. Imported sardines fairly active at firm prices.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are steady to firm, but are not selling very well. Prices show no change, either spot or future. Peaches, apricots, raisins, currants and the balance of the dried fruit list are all dull without change in price.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes remain unchanged from a week ago, both spot and future. The market is inclined to be easy, and some sales of futures are said to have been made in New York at 65 cents delivered, which is the lowest price made for a long while. The outlook for the pack is good. Corn and peas show no change for the week. Peas are still weak and heavy. Apples unchanged and quiet. California canned goods, both spot and future, quiet for the moment at rather easy prices. Small Eastern staple canned goods show no change and light demand.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are about 20 cents per bushel off, due to larger supply. The demand is quiet. Marrows still steady to firm at unchanged prices; demand fair. Perhaps the feeling is a shade firmer. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The butter market is firm and active at an advance of 1 cent per pound. There is considerable increase in the consumptive demand and the quality of the current receipts is averaging good for the season. At the advance the market is healthy and no revolutionary change is looked for in the near future.

Eggs.

Fancy eggs are firm at an advance of 1 cent over a week ago. The percentage of fine stock is light on account of heat defects. Most of the receipts are selling at shaded prices. The receipts of eggs are about normal and no immediate change is in sight.

Cheese.

The make of cheese is a little above normal and the quality is averaging fancy. The market is steady and unchanged with only a moderate consumptive demand. The outlook for the cheese market is steady at about present prices.

Provisions.

All smoked meats, including picnic, regular and skinback hams, bellies and bacon are steady with a

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

* Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

"Our Own" Baked Beans.—We assume that many who read the weekly "Straight Talks" have not the authority to go ahead with some of the suggestions submitted, but you have authority to submit them to your manager or your employer. The food field is as wide as it is interesting, and every departure from the stereotyped selling that shows a profit and that interests people is a good departure.

One of these is selling baked beans. If your firm operate a bakery or a delicatessen kitchen, don't fail to sell beans, and the most attractive way to handle these is to sell them in round tin pans, $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches deep and 6 inches across, at 10 cents, no charge for the pans and no returns. They're baked in three-gallon stone pots, then spooned into the pans for browning. They're a very quick seller and you can very easily figure the profit. If you experience any difficulty in getting these pans the writer will gladly give the manufacturer's address.

Brooms.—"Out of sight, out of mind," surely applies to brooms, this we know from many an experience. A cheap but attractive sample broom rack should be placed out doors occasionally, but your full variety kept inside. The increased sale will pay for the rack in no time. Isn't it a fact that a new broom appeals to every housekeeper? We are not psychologist enough to explain why, we have only sufficient business gumption to observe that it's so and that broom displays sell brooms.

Vinegar Window.—"Put a vinegar window in," said the manager. "Any suggestions?" said the clerk. "None," said the manager. So he put an empty barrel in the center, put a tap in it and a gallon price tag on it; filled 20 clean glass gallon jars with white and cider vinegar; put 40 bottles ($\frac{1}{2}$ s) in too; cut a couple big branches from a wild apple tree; got his gallon jug price and his bottle price in; covered the bottom of the window with smaller branches—changing them every second day—and vinegar commenced to move. The window was one constant, silent suggestion. It created the acid taste. Men and women who stopped saw a plate of sliced tomatoes on their table that evening. And how would tomato taste without vinegar?

A store that isn't alive to this sensible suggestion idea is not getting its money's worth. To get all there in it we must almost put the goods in their mouth.

"Goodness, do you people sell this and she went forward and picked up a package of Swedish health bread. She had eaten it in the Swiss hotels, and friends were told about it, her doctor was told about it. Demand for Swedish bread started from the "society quarter" and there you are. Display. Carry things out of the ordinary.

Splendid study—is the grocery business.

air consumptive demand. Prices are about unchanged. Pure lard is a normal demand at unchanged prices, while compound is an eighth lower for the week and very dull. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are unchanged and only in fair demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Spices.

The market, while active, is rather regular. Some articles are in excellent demand, others not so active. Prices have changed very little during the week. Some articles, however, have advanced steadily. The trade demand is likely to be large during the balance of August and September.

Peppers.—Few changes to report this week. Ocean rates, which are now higher than ever before, are now likely to advance. There is an actual scarcity of vessels and these conditions are likely to have a tendency to advance prices. The approaching season is one of uncertainty and the future is really hard to forecast.

Cloves.—Quiet and generally unchanged. The spot supply, however, is very limited.

Pimento (Allspice).—In fair demand at present prices, which are the lowest in record.

Nutmegs.—In fair demand and unchanged prices. The supply is rapidly increasing.

Paprikas.—Unchanged during the week. The heavy consuming season is just approaching. Hungarian grades continue out of stock. Spanish grades in fair supply at unchanged prices.

Mace.—The better grades are scarce. Prices steady.

Gingers.—Are neglected and without any special feature.

Tapiocas.—Are much higher and firmer in the East. The demand here is fair, season considered. Prices steady and firm.

Rice.

Under fair inquiry last week the rice market has exhibited a noticeable improvement. The call has been for general assortment. Screenings are scarce; the same being true of the lower and fancy Honduras styles. Medium Honduras being in fair supply. Japans are in demand, the trade realizing that three months will elapse before new crop Japans appear in commercial quantities. Blue Rose ruling steady, under quiet demand.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast show slight improvement in the demand during the past week; some merchants having advanced specified shipping dates, thereby indicating improving conditions. From what we can gather the Carolina crop has all been disposed of, and what little may be offered, is solely from the dealers.

At New Orleans the market continues quiet, evidently waiting for the arrival of milling quantities of new crop. There was a little better inquiry during the past week, due undoubtedly to the fact that prices appear attractive and buyers feel that the new crop river rice, which is always of very high quality, will not enter into competition with the grades of old crop that are on the market.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, occasionally sales are reported at steady prices. It is the general opinion that very little old rough rice is left in first hands. The weather continues favorable for the maturing crop in most localities, while in some sections there are reports of lack of moisture.

Holland Herrings.—Our agents in Holland report that prices for new Holland herrings are abnormally high. Quotations are about twice as high as they usually are at the beginning of the season. Of course, under the circumstances, no business is possible at the present moment.

Our friends report also that the catch of sardelles in Holland was almost a total failure. Prices, therefore, have advanced very materially.

Our Norwegian agents report that the weather in Iceland has so far been exceptionally cold, so that the herrings have not come to the surface; consequently little or no catch, but a good catch is expected as soon as the weather gets milder. No matter how good a catch they may have on Iceland, prices are likely to be very high, owing to the very much higher prices prevailing for salt, empty barrels, labor, freight, etc., etc.

In sympathy with other prices for foodstuffs, prices in Europe are very high, also for stockfish. Besides, there are no old stocks left over from last season, and this year's catch being a very small one, we shall have to reckon with very high prices for all kinds of both split and round stockfish.

The catch of Norwegian sardines is quite satisfactory, as far as quantity and quality are concerned, but the demand is so large that packers have no difficulty in disposing of their supply. Consequently they are not open to entertain our offers, which are below their expectations. The trade here is not anxious to buy large quantities of Norwegian sardines at present asking prices, as importers who have old stocks are still selling them at prices which are way below the parity of to-day's Norwegian asking prices. Should the demand for Norwegian sardines in Europe subside, and if the Norwegian packers are more intent upon selling their goods to this country, as usual, it is very likely that we shall see lower prices, but under no circumstances can we expect the usually low figures for the cheap grades of Norwegian sardines this season. So far none of the cheaper grades of sardines has been packed, as there has been no suitable fish therefor, and when the cheaper grade of fish appears, it is likely that very high prices will be paid for the same, even right in the beginning. What the future will bring forth is impossible to say.

At the present moment no supplies can be had from France, in fact, we have had no report as to the French sardine fishing as yet from our people abroad, although there should be a catch of sardines going on now. In Portugal, unfortunately, there is no suitable fish at the present moment, but this is rather usual. The small fish which is wanted for the American market usually does not make its appearance until late in the summer or the beginning of the fall, so we are still living in hopes of being able to secure a supply of Portuguese sardines to replenish our practically exhausted stocks.

Federal later advancing to basis 5.90 cents. A large business was transacted on the turn of the market at former prices, although refiners restricted business to assortment with order, and some only giving one week's delay, assortment to follow. The situation appears stronger from day to day and the market looks perfectly safe for this month at least, probably longer.

The withdrawal demand is good and the consumption should be heavy during the next two months. We think the trade will do well to carry better stocks in store and order somewhat ahead of their immediate requirements. The stronger market will cause an increased withdrawal demand and shipments will be somewhat delayed for a short time.

The raw sugar market has ruled strong, active and higher again, with speculators apparently outbidding refiners on all offerings, although refiners showed more interest, being buyers of several lots in various positions at advancing and full prices.

Sales reported during the day as follows: 7,500 bags Cubas, August 25th, at equal centrifugals 96 test, 4.86 cents, duty paid, to Federal; 50,000 bags Cubas some for prompt shipment and at equal 4.86 cents, and September shipment at 4.89 cents, duty paid, to Howell and Federal; 27,000 bags due September 1st, at 4.89 cents, to Howell; 15,000 bags for August shipment from Cuba at equal 4.95 cents, to a Philadelphia refiner.

The market closes very strong, all offerings having been quickly taken by the various buyers. It is reported that Java during July shipped to Europe 125,000 tons.

MARKET NOTES.

Watermelons are coming from Maryland and North Carolina. Lots of them are poor, but the best bring only 40 cents.

Tomatoes are still cheap, second earlies ranging from 20 to 35 cents per basket.

Peaches have advanced. Southern peaches that were $1.60 are now quoted at $2. Nearby peaches range from 15 to 75 cents; lots of them are poor.

Lima beans are away off. They were $1 a few days ago, but dropped to 25 to 30 cents. Excessive supply was the reason.

California grapes of the small white variety are coming forward and $1.25 is top. North Carolina grapes bring about $1.50 per eight-basket carrier.

White potatoes are higher, though the coming crop is enormous. They were as low as 18 cents, but are 30 cents at this writing.

Green Oil Soap Causes $200,000 Suit.

A little jar of Green Oil Soap has involved Montgomery Ward & Co., the Chicago mail order house, in a $200,000 damage suit and a bill for injunction to prevent them from mailing out their new forthcoming catalogue containing the picture of this little jar and the name Green Oil Soap from appearing in the catalogue. The Monahan Anti-septic Co., of Chicago, makers of this soap, brought the suit. In the bill of particulars it is alleged that Montgomery Ward & Co. have taken advantage of the plaintiff's advertising campaign in behalf of the soap and in the Montgomery Ward & Co. catalogue, 5,000,000 copies of which are alleged to be distributed every year, to have advertised a "Green Oil Soap" of their own and cut the price below what the dealer could buy it from the jobber. It is alleged the soap is not the genuine green oil soap of the plaintiff, but of other make and of inferior grade. It is alleged that the complainant company has the exclusive right to the trade name Green Oil Soap, although several attempts have been made to infringe it. In January, 1904, the bill states, suit was filed against Armour & Co. for infringement, but later that company entered into a written agreement to discontinue the name for a period of 20 years. In December, 1904, a similar agreement was executed by James S. Kirk & Co., and in May, 1907, by Beckley-Ralston Co.

Beware of Wormy Horse Beans. They Are Illegal.

Government Issues Special Warning Against Shipping Them in Interstate Commerce for Food Purposes. Already There Are Some About.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

August 12, 1915.

Investigations by the department have shown that there are large quantities of horse beans being shipped into interstate commerce for food purposes and that some of these horse beans are wormy or weevil infested. Such wormy or weevil infested beans are unfit for food purposes. The Department of Agriculture therefore is serving notice that the shipment of such products into interstate commerce is in violation of the Food and Drugs Act.

For a number of years the department has refused admittance to this country of shipments of wormy horse beans. On account of the war very few horse beans are now shipped to this country, and there has been an increased demand for the domestic product. The horse bean is a staple article of diet among certain foreign born residents.

Wormy beans become infested while growing on the vines. Eggs are laid on the small green pods, and the larvae hatched from the eggs burrow into the beans where they slowly develop. The wormy beans can be readily detected and, in the opinion of the department, there is no excuse for selling them for food purposes. The full text of a warning issued by the department regarding this matter follows:—

Investigation by the Bureau of Chemistry has shown that there exists a practice of shipping into interstate commerce wormy or weevil infested horse beans, broad beans (vicia faba). These horse beans are used almost entirely for food purposes. This infestation does not occur in transit, but during the development of the bean, and can be easily detected by examination of the beans before shipment. The Bureau will regard as in violation of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, all horse beans shipped into interstate commerce or offered for importation into the United States, which are so infested to any material extent.

HOLT.

NOTE.—Faba, or horse beans, are grown in California. They look like a lima bean, are brown in color and very oily.—ED.

Some Nifty Fashion Hints for Business People.

I suppose in some ways I'm one of the sloppiest little salesmen that walks the road. I ain't built for nifty clothes, and as I'd look just as worse no matter what I had on, I don't pay much attention to it except to keep washed up as well as I can without scraping the skin off.

When I was a tender young thing, back home, I wore a silk plug hat to church one day. Four horses ran away, and an old lady that used to be fitty, but thought she was cured, had the worst fit she ever had in her life.

So I sort of got cold feet, and said what was the use?

But listen here—I can tell when other fellows have the right kind of togs on, and believe me some of the duds I see on good responsible business people, on my trips around, are the living limit. Does it make any difference to their business? Well, I don't know as it does, but it makes a heap of difference to the way people look at 'em—I mean their position in the town—and that makes a difference to their business.

The other day I was talking things over with a customer of mine. He was getting off some stuff about the high cost of living and he talked about what it cost him to live.

"I keep my expenses down," he said, "it don't cost me much to live. There's only me and the wife and we don't spend much. Take this suit; I only paid $13 for it."

And believe me, it looked it. You can't keep a $13 suit quiet. It's going to tell its own story no matter what you do. There never was a $13 suit that talked the same talk as a $30 suit.

The other day in a train I sat behind a fat dame that was talking the ears off a girl that sat with her, and I heard her get this off: "If she'd only kept her mouth shut people would have thought she was a dead swell lady." I suppose her clack gave her away, whoever she was. But remember this, a $13 suit has its mouth open all the time. Get that? And it's put many a man in the mucker class that wasn't a real mucker at all.

My friend didn't ask me what I thought of his suit, so I didn't tell him. But I know good duds when I see 'em, and they didn't belong. He ain't a bad looking fellow at all, but in that suit he looked plumb like a $13 man. When you put a $1.25 hat on top of it and send him out in the street, you've got a fellow that has put himself right down in the $13 class.

You take that fellow walking around his town in his $13 duds, and then send him out again with a good $30 suit, made to fit him, and a decent hat. You've got a different proposition entirely. Nobody can tell me. He's a different man. He looks different and he feels different.

You get one kick from a $13 suit and another from a $30 one. The $13 kick makes you feel like you should say "sir" to everybody else, but the $30 kick makes you feel like making 'em say sir to you.

I don't care a ding who he is—nobody can put on a $13 suit and make a business call on a man who has a $30 suit on, and feel as comfortable as if he could look the other fellow in the face and say to himself: "Dadburn ye! you've got nothing on me when it comes to clothes—my suit's as good as yours."

I've got to fess up I ain't ever felt that myself, but I can see how it does it, and other fellows have told me that's the way it works every time.

I've seen fellows, when they went out to put over a big deal, boost themselves up by hitting a couple just before they went in. Darn fools! If they'd put on a good suit of clothes they'd find they'd be boosted a heap more and they wouldn't smell so. Take it from yours truly, if clothes don't make the man, they sure do make the way people look at him. Ain't that right?

This customer of mine I fairly ached to do things to. I'd have lifted his $13 suit off him and then hunted up his little $1.25 hat and sent 'em both to the Salvation Army. I didn't see the hat, but I know it belongs to the suit; I can just see it. Another thing I'd do would be to have his hair cut over. He ain't found out yet that that old saucer cut, that looks like the cut that mother used to make, has gone out. No fellow ever looked big with a hair cut like that; it's a sure rough neck trade-mark.

When I got through with him he'd look good enough to be elected to anything. He'd be a fellow that could stand alongside of any bank president in his town and size up just as good.

If you think that don't have any effect on business, you can guess again. It does. The storekeeper that wears good clothes and holds himself up, and looks as good as anybody, is one thing. The same fellow in a $13 suit and a bargain hat and a rough neck hair cut, is another thing. Don't you forget that. People take the first fellow on their own level, but they put the second fellow on a level below 'em. No, I'm wrong. He puts himself on a level below 'em, and they say all right, stay there if you want to.

All that makes business or it hurts it. Maybe not right away. Maybe Mrs. Smith, seeing my customer in the new suit I bought for him, wouldn't say to herself: "My, that suit of Mr. Jones is so beautiful, I'll just have to go down and buy a pound of coffee." Nothing to it that way at all. The thing don't work that way. But it works.

Just as I told another friend of mine once, when we were talking this same thing over.

"Here's what you are telling people when you go out with a cheap suit on," I said. "You say to 'em: 'I'm a poor little fellow who is such a bum business man that can't afford real clothes. All I can afford is this dinky little thing that bags in the seat and rides so high in the neck it pushes my hat off. I'm a failure—I'm a cheap little man and if you was to kick me you wouldn't care much.'"

Blame me if I'd want people to look at me that way, even if it was true. I mean the people in the town where I did business. I want to stand as cocky as the best.

Now get me right. When I say a cheap suit I mean one that is cheap and looks cheap. I don't mean a $25 suit reduced to $12.50. I don't call that a cheap suit; that's a good suit. I suppose there are such tidbits as that; I've heard 'em, though I never saw one. At the time I get to these bargain sales everything's gone but coats with 12-inch bust or something like that. My bust is 48 plus.

Record Food Crops Predicted United States Government.

Enormous food crops are promised the United States this year by the Agricultural Department, which issued August estimate during the week. The billion bushels of corn, 1,500,000,000 bushels of oats and 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat are in prospect. Record crops of rye, white and sweet potatoes, tobacco, rice and hay also are predicted. The wheat crop, the greatest ever grown in any country, will be worth more than $1,000,000,000, while the corn crop's value may reach $2,500,000,000. White potatoes promise to exceed the former record production by 103,000,000 bushels, and sweet potatoes by 4,000,000 bushels. Other increases over record crops indicated include tobacco, 28,000,000 pounds; flax, 4,200,000 bushels; hay, 2,400,000 tons, and rye, 1,300,000 bushels. The production of the country's leading crops is estimated as follows: Winter wheat, 659,000,000 bushels; spring wheat, 307,000,000 bushels; corn, 2,918,000,000 bushels; oats, 1,400,000,000 bushels; barley, 217,000,000 bushels; rye, 44,000,000 bushels; buckwheat, 18,000,000 bushels; white potatoes, 4,000,000 bushels; sweet potatoes, 63,000,000 bushels; tobacco, 1,083,000,000 pounds; flax, 18,000,000 bushels; rice, 30,000,000 bushels; hay, 75,000,000 tons; apples, 205,000,000 bushels; peach, 60,000,000 bushels.

Apples are selling well and are cheap—50 to 60 cents a basket.

Here's Something Better Than Talk

What's the use of our going on talking to you when a stamp and a couple of days will tell you completely whether we can be of any service to you.

Just send us a sample of coffee that you think pretty well of. We'll match it and tell you what we'll supply it for. That beats talk all hollow.

We should be able to save you money, when we use no salesmen—only the mail. It's found to cost more to sell coffee when it's done through salesmen.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes—is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

324.—Some Interesting and Important Law About Buying Goods.

Touching the question of buying goods, and closing contracts for them, and so on, the following letter will be of interest:—

New York, N. Y.

Please tell us whether we are bound in the following case. If we are we will have to change our whole method of buying from outside parties:—

Considerable of our goods are purchased from outside concerns, chiefly in Chicago, Ill., and Omaha, Neb., and the negotiations are by mail. The houses in question do not have a New York agent. About a week ago we received a letter from one of these houses, located in Chicago, offering a quantity of merchandise for late August shipment at a certain price. The market in this line has been strong for several months, and at the time we received the offer, prices were high. We decided at once to buy, and within a few hours mailed a letter accepting the offer and placing the order. About an hour after this we received a tip from a reliable source that the market would break the following day. Our informant mentioned the price to which the market would drop, which made our order, just placed, look like a very bad buy. Accordingly we wired the Chicago house to disregard our letter of even date. The market did break the next day and the Chicago house now seeks to hold us to the order. They duly received our letter of acceptance and say they will ship the goods late August. Have they any right to do that?

Respectfully yours,
MORGAN & BARNES.

They have a perfect right to hold you to the order, and you are undoubtedly bound by it. The reason is that while an offer can always be withdrawn before acceptance, it can never be withdrawn without the other party's consent, after acceptance. The offer in your case was under the law accepted the minute you posted your letter. The mail was regarded as the seller's messenger, not yours, and when you committed your letter of acceptance to the mail, it was as if you gave it personally to a representative of the Chicago house.

The fact that your wire doubtless reached the Chicago house before your letter did, makes no difference. The thing was done the minute you mailed your letter.

As a matter of fact, it would have been a binding contract even had your letter of acceptance never reached its destination, or reached it after long delay. I remember a case in which A wrote to B making an offer of some goods, and telling him to reply by letter. B did reply by letter accepting the offer, but the letter went astray and did not get to A until two days after it should have. Meanwhile A waited until time to receive B's answer, and not hearing from him, sold the goods to another buyer. The market had advanced and B sued A for damages for failure to deliver. A of course defended on the ground that he had every right and reason to sell the goods, but the court decided otherwise, and held that a contract existed from the minute B posted his letter. I confess I have never quite seen the justice of this, especially in cases where a letter of acceptance goes astray, for it seems like holding A, in the above stated case, for instance, to something that he couldn't possibly know anything about. However, it is the well-settled law.

As soon as there is an acceptance, there is a contract, but there must without doubt have been an acceptance. As I have explained, there is no question about a flat letter of acceptance, but there may be some doubt when acceptance depends on acts rather than words. I should say that a contract can be accepted by acts.

There was a case in which a firm that wanted to buy goods wrote to a man who made the particular thing wanted as follows: "Upon an agreement to furnish such and such, you can begin shipment in two weeks from date." The seller thought the buyer would take it for granted that he would furnish the goods inquired about, so he did not reply. He merely went out at once and bought the raw material to fill the order. The next day the order was countermanded. The seller tried to hold the buyer to it, but the court said "no, you never accepted the order."

Let me explain a little more in detail the legal principle that lies behind many of these cases. When A offers goods by mail to B, he chooses the mail as his, A's, messenger, and the mail waits for B's reply. If B replies by mail accepting, there is legal acceptance and contract when the letter is mailed. But it must be the chosen messenger who gets the answer; otherwise there is no acceptance. For instance A offers goods to B by mail stipulating "if you want these reply by wire only, sometime to-morrow the 8th." If B replies by letter instead of wire, and A has sold the goods before the letter is received B has no remedy, for he took his chance by using his own messenger instead of A's.

What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander—after the letter of acceptance is posted, the other party cannot withdraw either even though he posts or wires his withdrawal before the letter of acceptance reaches him.

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Mustard Display.

Start this display by covering the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. Across the rear of the bottom of the window nail a strong four or five-inch board and on the edge of this tack some paper also. The lettering like in cut can be cut from black paper and pasted on or printed on with black paint. Build pyramids of the different size boxes of dry mustard on this board. Make a neat sign card suspended from the top of the window. On each side toward the rear of the window place 5 and 10-cent glasses to form a "V" shape. Arrange a few bottles of mustard dressing on each side toward the front. Cover a small wooden box with white crepe paper and letter like in cut, and on top of this fill a large jar of loose prepared mustard. Now cover the rim of a cheese box with white crepe paper and fill the lid with yellow mustard seed, placing it in the center of the front of the window.

Judging a Store by Baking Powder

Baking powder seems a little thing to you, but somebody will judge your store by it. We do not see how there can be but one opinion as to

Rumford Baking Powder

None can possibly leaven better or insure more wholesome food. Its absolute Purity, uniform strength and keeping quality make baking results most dependable, which means a pleased customer and that every can of Rumford you sell will sell other cans for you.

Rumford pays you a greater profit than any other high-grade baking powder—it will pay you to recommend it.

RUMFORD CHEMICAL WORKS, Providence, R. I.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find several of my circulars which I have been using during the last several months.

Yours truly,
JOSEPH ALMES.

Inclosed with this were several circulars of the uniform size of 9 x 12 inches—typical cut-price circulars. Here is perhaps the best:

typical cut-price dodger that one sees kicking about the streets. I should not want to publicly put my store in that class, perhaps not even if it really belonged there. You can make the same points with better looking advertising that will appeal to a better class of consumers as well as to the others. An ex-salesmanship after you get people in the store. If the useless matter on the top about "our groceries are right," etc., and "buy your groceries and meats," etc., had been left off—it has no strength whatever—there would have been enough space to properly display the goods advertised. I don't just see why so much space was given to the Campbell's soup cuts. If you were advertising Campbell's goods at a cut price there might be some force in calling attention to the bargain by printing the cuts, but it is one of the few articles you are selling at the full price, and you give it more space than anything else. From the standpoint of a cut-price sale, this doesn't look logical.

Herndon, Va., August 7, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I am a subscriber to your paper and am learning to depend upon it more each week.

I have taken the liberty of inclosing a letter that I am going to send out to my patrons (all farmers), and would greatly appreciate your opinion of it and your criticism before I mail it out.

I have a country store, nearest competitor three miles. Patrons get their milk checks each month, but "pay your grocer last" is their motto.

This is a good stand, but in 20 years two merchants have given up in disgust.

I'm not going to. Hence, this letter.

Thanking you in advance,
Yours truly,

A. H. KIRK.

P. S.—I might add that letters will be typewritten and that all patrons are old friends I have known for years, thus differing from most announcements of this kind.

The proposed letter is as follows:

Each year after inventory we have written you, but we have a suspicion that this year's letter has more "kick" to it than any previous effort.

Our third inventory shows a slight increase in amount of stock, considerable increase in amount of bills due wholesalers and nearly $1,000 out on credit.

At the present wholesale prices of merchandise we are about convinced that a home merchant cannot do an honest business and do most of it on credit. He can't sell sugar, meal, etc., on long credit and let Raleigh, Larkin and Sears, Roebuck get cash for the only thing there is any profit in.

Hereafter we propose to compete with these birds in many things, but in order to do it we must have the money to buy to advantage and to discount our bills.

We are tired of shouting hard times (it has been no joke with us), and we believe the times are just about what we make them.

During the next year you won't hear any more hard times at Floris Store; you are going to get the best of service, you are going to buy cheaper than ever before, but on September 1st we are going to close all accounts, and after that date we will do only a strictly cash business.

Competition has already cut many staple groceries to the last cent, but wherever possible we are going to make reductions.

We are not going to cater to patrons of other stores, and our prices, just as far as possible, will be limited to our Floris friends alone.

We are going to ask you to reserve your final opinion of the seeming radical change until you receive our list of prices September 1st.

Yours very truly,
A. H. KIRK.

I think this is a good letter. I think it is a very good letter—reasonable, clear, dignified—and answerable. Only the most narrow minded person could object to it. I have no idea that all of Mr. Kirk's customers will come smilingly forward and start to pay cash the minute they read this letter. I don't think any letter that could be written could do that, but this friendly communication will go as toward as most anything in judgment.

Law Licensing Commission Merchants Upheld.

The law requiring commission merchants to pay a license, provide a demnity bond of $3,000, to charge 10 per cent. for handling consignments and compelling a detailed account of sales on each shipment, has been upheld by the Supreme Court of Washington in the case of Walter B. & Co. The commission merchants of Washington have been trying to get the law changed to 15 per cent., but the new law stands.

New sweet potatoes are coming forward from North Carolina and farther North and nearby. The price, if good, averages $3.50, and basket price $1.25, which is about the same as a week ago.

If Mr. Almes is willing that people should size up his store as a cheap looking place—I mean the people who don't patronize it regularly and whose trade he is trying to get—then he is using the right kind of advertising matter. Because that is the impression which his circulars make on me. I cannot conceive of a store issuing circulars that look like these being of classy appearance. Mr. Almes should have a strong talk with his printer—he is not giving him good work. Of course perhaps Mr. Almes is getting as good work as he is paying for. Perhaps he ordered a cheap job. In that case he and not the printer is to blame. It would be a great mistake in my judgment to deliberately order such printing as this.

I should first change the whole get-up of this sheet. It is now the perienced advertiser once told me that he believed that the ordinary poor consumer, such as the wife of a laboring man earning $15 or $16 a week, was not only not attracted by high-grade advertising matter, but was actually repelled by it because she associated it with high prices. I don't agree with this at all, unless he meant by high-grade advertising, fancy expensive engraved stuff or something like that. As to that, doubtless what he said was true. It is not true, as to advertising matter that merely looks substantial and good. I would always be afraid that even a poor consumer would conclude, if I issued shoddy advertising, that I sold only shoddy goods.

There is too much matter on this circular to allow it to be properly displayed—I should have cut it down a third. Depend more on

$75 for a Window Display

And you sit down and can't decide whether to make it or not! Altogether we will pay $175 for Lipton Tea Display as below, capital prize $75.

It is the most important Window Dressing Contest ever held. When you see how easily these prizes are won, you will be exceedingly sorry you did not win one.

The contest is for the five best window displays of Lipton's Tea. Here are the conditions:—

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes September 1, 1915.

FLEISCHMANN'S

is purchased, say, two or three times every week by the housewife who bakes. And every time she comes in for a "cake of yeast" you have a fine chance to talk up and sell her other things too.

PURE

"Keeps its strength to the greatest length" and that's why consumers know it's "The Lye to Buy." There are many uses for lye and its virtue all lies in the way it is made, just as its sale depends on the way it's advertised. We keep up its quality and strength. It is unequalled as a home soap maker, disinfectant and deodorizer. The new sifter top tin makes it handy for the consumer to use. Call your customers' attention to this new package and you have additional sales and profits. The Trade Marks are good for valuable and useful presents.

Here Is Your Question Answered

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

Where to Get Premium Goods	4

A Case of Boycotting a Premium Plan

Pennsylvania Subscriber Asks This Paper's Judgment on the Ethics and Advisability of the Stand of a Retail Grocers' Association Where the Effect is to Drive Business Away From Town.

The following letter is an interesting contribution to the literature of premiums:—

Williamsport, Pa., Aug. 13, 1915.

To the Editor:—

Would you please give me your opinion in regard to the following situation:—

In this city there is a Retail Grocers' Association; in this city also, some of the more wide-awake merchants are conducting that Universal Moving Ticket plan which has often been advertised in your paper, and therefore we presume has your sanction. Among the enthusiastic users of this plan there is a baker, a wholesale coffee-roasting concern, a flour manufacturer, etc., all these pack the ticket coupons in their goods, which are handled by grocers. Now after the plan has started nicely and is just getting to be a fine-paying proposition for the man using it, along comes this Association and says that its members will not handle any goods in their stores which contain Universal Movie Tickets.

Now, on the other hand, the Movie Ticket Company, which is a very honorable concern in our estimation, and in the estimation of all others who are using it in this town, made the following arrangement with the aforesaid baker, miller and coffee man when they sold them the tickets. "If you use these tickets we will agree not to allow any of our other users handling your commodities to pack them in their goods coming into your town, hence you can keep the coffee, bread, flour trade, etc., in Williamsport."

Now, Mr. Editor, do you honestly think that this Association is justified in boycotting the packers of these tickets? It means to either let them continue to use them and keep the money in Williamsport or allow some out-of-town concern to pack them and to send the money out of town. The tickets are proving a big success around here and are given out by at least twenty or more retailers in different lines. Everybody, in fact, is saving them, so it would be a slight matter for the people to switch their bread, coffee and flour trade to some out-of-town concern. We know for an absolute fact that one out-of-town baker would use these tickets if the ticket company would allow them to pack them in the bread which he ships to Williamsport, but they will not. This bakery, nevertheless, is going to use them in other towns which do not conflict with the Williamsport bakers' vicinity.

The local baker told me to-day that this plan had already helped his business to a noticeable extent. Why should this Association endeavor to stop this worthy cause when it has gained so much headway so far with this man and would naturally do it for others. "What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, too." This Association is very strong on the trade-at-home proposition and in my mind, that is a very good incentive to create that here.

We would appreciate your very immediate reply to this matter.

Very truly yours,
SIMON'S GROCERY COMPANY,
Harold H. Miller, Manager.

We know the Retail Grocers' Association of Williamsport to be a live and intelligent organization, and we assume that its stand on the movie ticket plans is of a piece with its opposition to all kind of premiums. If its attitude on the movie tickets would drive them from the city, that would be one thing. If its attitude would merely prevent local packing concerns from using them, and switch the trade to out-of-town packers—and perhaps out-of-town retailers—that is another thing. If, in other words, the members of the Williamsport Grocers' Association are obliged to have movie tickets in their town, as it would seem they are, then we respectfully suggest that they might find it better to handle them in such a way that their local packers can get some benefit from them.

We believe that under retail business conditions as they exist to-day, it is totally impossible to drive premiums from a community. There will always be retailers who believe it is good business to handle them. Therefore when a boycott of premium plans or premium goods is proposed, the question always is: is it possible that this can accomplish the purpose, or is it, on the other hand, more likely to react on the boycotters?

Philadelphia Jobbers Decide to Cut to Cost Prices of Trademarked Brands

Start With Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes, Shredded Wheat and Cream of Wheat. The Scheme is an Effort to Compete With the Enlarging Girard Grocery Company. Eighteen Local Jobbers Organize Co-operative Buying Plan and Ask Manufacturers for Extra Discounts.

Some very interesting developments are taking form among the wholesale grocers of Philadelphia and Eastern Pennsylvania, in connection with the question of competing with the Girard Grocery Co., the collateral corporation of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association. The extension plans of the Girard Grocery Co. have already been published. They comprehend the absorption of the assets of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association, the increase of capitalization, the soliciting of many new members without the former $200 initial investment and the selling of goods to everybody who will buy. All who are watching the situation believe that these plans will make the Girard Co. the largest and most powerful co-operative organization in the United States. Needing no profit, it can of course sell at prices which the most energetic and intelligent jobber cannot in many cases meet.

The local jobbers realize this fully, and have already laid plans to meet it. Their plans are twofold. Some eighteen of the local jobbers have organized a sort of co-operative buying organization which is apparently being managed by Max Pincus, of John Price & Co. Those interested decline to give out a list of the eighteen members of this plan, but they give out a list which they say contains the names of those who are not interested. If this list is accurate, it makes the following jobbers participants:—

Reeves, Parvin & Co., Samuel Howell, Comly, Flanigen & Co., H. Kellogg & Sons, E. Klein, James Crawford, Githens, Rexsamer & Co., J. Gillespie & Son, J. Graham & Son Co., William J. Graham & Co., Hiester, Rieff & Co., H. K. Kindig & Co., Kirk, Foster & Co., Merchants' Wholesale Co., William Montgomery & Co., John Price & Co., Thomas Roberts & Co., John Scott & So., Charles Shaw & Son, J. Frank Shull Co., Wilson & Richards.

Apparently there is nothing to this plan except co-operative buying. Already its promoters have approached several manufacturers and in consideration of a single order covering eighteen jobbers have asked for extra discounts, some cases up to 5 per cent. The promise was also made that the salesmen of the eighteen members would push the goods of manufacturers who granted extra concessions. So far as is known, the plan has not yet gotten any extra concessions to speak of.

Whether this plan is designedly part of another one which the jobbers have also organized in their own defense is not clearly known, but it probably is not. A number of the larger Philadelphia jobbers had a conference a few days ago and decided to concertedly cut the price of a considerable list of advertised trade-marked articles. It is said that about ten jobbers have gone into this scheme, which is not favored by the Tri-State Wholesale Grocers' Association. The argument of the jobbers appears to be that by holding up the price of the trade-marked goods, notably Cream of Wheat, Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes and Shredded Wheat, they have been at a serious disadvantage in competing with the Girard Grocery Co. They sold at list, while the members of the Girard, direct or indirectly, got the benefit of lower prices. Therefore the jobbers who are in this plan will—fact already have started to—cut the package goods in question to cost. Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes Co., for instance, they are selling at $2.60.

But few trade-marked brands make any attempt to-day to fix and hold their prices, and there is therefore not as much ammunition as there would have been a few years ago. But while the regular jobbers may not have sold all these goods at list, they have sold them above cost so that their cut to cost makes a considerable slash.

The interesting question is how the manufacturers will take it. Some of them have threatened to cut off all jobbers cutting below list, but nothing like that has happened yet, and there is reason to believe that no such action will happen. In one case a Norristown jobber called up the Philadelphia agent of a large manufacturer and complained that the Philadelphia jobbers were coming into his territory and slashing the prices of this manufacturer's brand. The agent told him to go ahead and meet the cut

WITH THE EDITOR

A Letter and the Answer.

Is our answer to this letter right or wrong?—

St. Clair, Pa., Aug 12, 1915.

To the Editor:—

The Bell store has come to town and cut the life and profit out of business. Can you advise how to hold trade from going there?

Yours truly,
W. R. MASON.

We regret that there is no royal road to relief from these conditions. The Bell Company is a chain-store concern and naturally can do more than any single store. To beat it you must give the public something better than the Bell Co. gives, either in quantity, quality, price or service. The chance is you cannot do better either in quantity or quality, for the same markets are open to you both. As to price, you may or may not be able to compete with the Bell store. It is unquestionably buying cheaper than you are, but it does not follow that it can—or cares to—sell cheaper, for its overhead expenses are extremely heavy and it is carrying some dead wood.

You practically have but one chance, as we see it, and that is with service. You can give your customers better service than the Bell store can, and in that way may gain an advantage over the Bell store which will enable you to hold trade against it. By service we do not alone mean such factors as politeness in the store and prompt delivery, but personality. No Bell store has any personality. It is one link of a long chain, run by employees, often not even residents of the town. People deal with it because they think they can buy cheaper and that is practically their only reason.

As against this take your store. It is run by you, a citizen of the place, known to everybody in it. People who come find you there—you are on the job, you greet them, you talk with them, you take an interest in their trade. The two stores are totally different places. One has a heart, the other has none. A big store doesn't need a heart so much, for obviously it cannot have one in the same sense, but a small store without a heart is a pretty cold proposition.

Any merchant with a personality can give it to his store, and can make it a place people will be glad to go to. As long as things are about equal, they will give it the preference over a Bell store. But if the Bell store is selling Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes for eight cents while you are asking ten, no amount of personality, no perfection of service, can get you the preference with all the people, though it will with some. Such competition is pretty nearly impossible to meet, unless you are in shape, or can get in shape, to sell at eight too.

Here is an interesting letter to "Trade," a Baltimore, Md., canners' paper, by a Maryland pea packer:—

Lineboro, Md., Aug. 4, 1915.

Dear Sir:—I was very much interested in your July 26th, 1915, issue, to see that the Wisconsin pea packers have begun to realize that they were selling peas below cost. I am very much surprised that they have not seen their losses before this.

I believe the Eastern pea packers ought to wake up, as well as Wisconsin. I do not know how we will exist, selling peas at such demoralizing prices. I had the pleasure this week of receiving an order from a broker for 1700 cases of Sifted Peas at 50 cents delivered, and I politely told him that I had no 50-cent peas to offer.

The consumer is paying as much for a can of peas as he ever did. Who in God's world is making the money? I know. Do you? If you don't, make a guess. He's making the money at the packer's expense and loss.

In Philadelphia last year I saw Wisconsin peas selling for 55 cents delivered—for the same peas I was asking 80 cents f. o. b. factory. Gentlemen, do you know the time has arrived when we either must have a stiff backbone or get out of business? Why can't we all begin together and at once stop giving our goods away, and instead get as much out of our day's work as a day laborer. If we can't do that and haven't backbone enough, I think we had all better stop packing peas for a year or two.

Yours truly,
A. G. GENTZ.

We have reported from time to time that canned peas are selling below cost. So, incidentally are canned tomatoes. The above letter reveals the situation as to peas very clearly and forcibly. It is fully as bad as there pictured, and there is also truth in the suggestion that some retailers do not sufficiently give their customers the benefit of low prices in the producing markets.

The real reason for the depressed prices of canned peas, however, is the fact that there are too many packers, and even in an average year they produce more peas than the consumption will take. Let some of them get out or reduce their output, and probably they will be able to sell their product at a profit.

The new plan of the Philadelphia jobbers to actively compete with the enlarged Girard

The Local Jobbers' New Plan of Competition. Grocery Co. is explained in another column. They propose to cut the prices of various trade-marked goods like Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes, Shredded Wheat, and so on, to actual cost. Their theory is that the members of the Girard have been buying these things at cost plus a margin for expenses, and they, the jobbers, have always lost out in the competition because they have been holding prices up to list. From now on they will go in and compete not only meeting any price which the Girard or any other company makes on these articles, but by going one better by selling at cost. Cost we presume means buying cost, so that the jobbing seller will pay out his expenses, which vary from 5 to 8 per cent. In other words, a long list of specialties, which the jobber has made good money in the past, now join sugar on which he usually makes a loss. The burden of loss which must be made up by the profit on other articles, now becomes that much greater, necessitating, it would seem, the charging of even greater profits on the articles that still remain profitable.

Surely a most radical move! It would seem shortsighted to the outsider, though we hesitate to criticize it as we cannot know all the facts and circumstances. Certainly it looks on its face like cutting the ground from beneath your own feet. What will the manufacturers say? Take the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co. It has always been particular to cut off firms which would not hold the price—will it have the courage to cut off all the jobbers who are now cutting its corn flakes to $2.60? Or will it not likely decide that it is useless to go on protecting the trade against their withdrawal and withdraw all restrictions, selling the chain stores which in the interest of jobbers it has for years refused to sell. If the Kellogg Co. is consistent, it will now have to cut these jobbers off, and since this, not made up some how, would seriously curtail its trade, it might decide to go direct to the retailer. A somewhat unpleasant possibility which surely the jobbers must have considered.

H. G. Flint Leaves Philadelphia for Better Position.

Local Manager for Shredded Wheat Co. Appointed General Sales Manager With Headquarters in Niagara Falls. A Capable, Popular Man.

The local trade will both regret and rejoice over the announcement that H. G. Flint who has for the last few years represented the Shredded Wheat Co. in Philadelphia, is to leave this market and establish himself in Niagara Falls. The rejoicing comes because he has been appointed to one of the highest positions in the Shredded Wheat Co.—general sales manager.

This is one of the best commercial positions in the United States, without a doubt, and equally without doubt the new incumbent is one of the best men in the United States for that kind of a position. Mr. Flint succeeds James Traverse, who goes to the Pacific Coast as general manager of the Pacific Coast Shredded Wheat Co., with territory everything west of the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. Flint has been with the Shredded Wheat Co. for about 10 years. He was formerly the company's agent in Chicago and made the same high record of efficiency there that he has in Philadelphia.

company has done a phenomenal business under him in the Philadelphia territory. He was president of the Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives for a while, and has always been conspicuous in anything which promised to help the trade. Flint is a good chap and everybody will be sorry to see him leave. He succeeded in Philadelphia by Ernest Pallman, formerly of the Boston office.

Hams, Bacon, etc., Are Not "Package Goods" in Pennsylvania

Therefore They Do Not Need to Bear Statement of Weight. So Says Attorney-General in Official Opinion to Chief of Weights and Measures Department.

The Attorney-General of Pennsylvania has been appealed to by James Sweeney, Chief of the Bureau of Standards, for an official opinion as to whether hams, bacon and similar commodities, when enclosed in the casings in which they are usually packed, are package goods within the meaning of the Pennsylvania act of 1913, requiring all package goods to bear a statement on the label of weight, measure or numerical count. The Attorney-General says in his judgment they are not package goods. The same question arose under the Federal act, and the United States authorities decided that hams, bacon, etc., were not package goods and need not carry the weight. In New York State, however, the Attorney-General is taking the position that these goods are package goods and must bear the weight.

The opinion of the Pennsylvania Attorney-General is as follows:—

Replying to your inquiry under date of the 11th inst., relative to the application of the Act of June 24, 1913, P. L. 965, to wrapped hams, bacon and other commodities, I beg to advise as follows:—

It is apparent that the object of the act is protect purchasers against fraud and deception as to the quantity or amount of the commodity purchased.

Section 7 of the act provides: "If in package form, the quantity of the contents shall be plainly and conspicuously marked on the outside of the package in terms of weight, measure or numerical count: Provided, however, that reasonable variations shall be permitted; and tolerances and also exemptions as to small packages shall be established by rules and regulations made by the chief of the Pennsylvania Bureau of Standards."

Your specific question is, "under the provisions of that section, do hams and bacon covered with paper or cloth, or sold in wrappings of any kind, constitute a package within the meaning of the law?"

The answer to this question suggests itself very readily when it is borne in mind that the object of this legislation is to protect persons in the purchase of commodities "in package form;" in other words, where commodities are sold per package, or by the package as such, as of a given weight or quantity, without weighing or measuring. In such case, the law provides that "the quantity of the contents shall be plainly and conspicuously marked on the outside of the package in terms of weight, measure or numerical count," obviously so that the purchaser will in that way be advised and know the quantity of the contents received. The term "package form" was accordingly intended to apply to such commodities as are put up in artificially determined sizes or quantities, fixed by the manufacturer or merchant, and intended to pass as such.

Section 1 of the act provides: "that the word 'commodity,' as used in this act, shall be taken to mean any tangible personal property sold or offered for sale." Hams and bacon, therefore, would come under this broad definition of the term "commodity;" but whether the sale of hams and bacon covered with paper or cloth, or sold in wrappings of any kind, would be a sale "in package form" would depend on whether or not they were sold per package as such or by separate and individual weight. You do not state the facts on this point necessary to specifically determine the question, but if I understand correctly, hams and bacon so covered or wrapped are not sold per package as such, the weights of the hams and bacon not being uniform, but are in each instance sold by weight per ham or bacon as wrapped, of which the purchaser is fully aware.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that, as to hams and bacon covered with paper, cloth or other wrapping and so sold, the act does not apply, and in such case it is not necessary that the quantity of the contents be marked on the outside of such package. The words "in package form" were similarly construed in reference to the same subject-matter in the case of State

v. Swift & Co., 120 N. W. Repr. 1127 (Neb.).

The reasoning in this opinion applies to all other commodities referred to in your communication. If they are sold per package as such, "the quantity of the contents must be plainly and conspicuously marked on the outside of the package in terms of weight, measure or numerical count," as the act provides. If they are wrapped merely for sanitary purposes and are not so sold, but in each instance are weighed, though with the container, covering or wrapper, of which the purchaser is fully aware, the act does not apply.

The New York Letter

Interesting Variation Between Offerings of Different Coupon Companies. Why New York State Thinks Cased Hams and Bacon Are Package Goods. Former Weights and Measures Superintendent Starts New Enterprise. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, August 20, 1915.

A student of the premium plan made an interesting investigation during the week, the purpose of which was to learn the comparative value of the offerings which the large coupon companies were making in their catalogues. He selected the goods of the United Profit-Sharing Corporation, the Mutual Profit Coupon Corporation and the Universal Profit-Sharing Company.

In making comparisons he selected the same trade-marked goods on the theory that any difference that he might find could not be accounted for in difference in quality. The United Profit-Sharing catalogue offers a Gillette Safety Razor for 250 certificates, and the Universal offers it for 245. The United Profit-Sharing Corporation offers a Bissell's Carpet Sweeper for 175, while the Mutual offers it for 165. A certain camera costs 500 certificates with the United Profit-Sharing Corporation, while with the Mutual it costs only 475. The same difference according to this investigator is the same with a large variety of articles.

The case brought by the State of New York against Armour & Co., on the theory that the latter's hams and bacon are package goods and must bear the weight on the wrapper is still dragging through the courts. The Attorney-General filed his brief during the week and its argument is interesting. Part of it is as follows:—

1. The wrapper for bacon sold was a container within the meaning of Article 2 of the General Business Law.

It is asserted at the outset that no case law in New York State or in any other decides this question. The New York Legislature has defined a container as a wrapper, as well as a carton, box, crate, barrel, keg, drum, parcel, jar, bag, package, etc., and the terms of the law make it quite clear that the wrappings in dispute constitute a container.

The New York Statute is radical, a step in advance, and intended to reach all cases where goods at the time of sale are actually covered or wrapped up.

It is not required that if I buy ten pounds of sugar and the grocer weighs it that he shall mark the bag he puts it into for delivery. I have asked for ten pounds of sugar and I am given ten pounds of sugar. However, if I ask for a particular bacon I see hanging wrapped in a heavy covering, or for a can of Whitehouse coffee, I am entitled to know how much that container weighs.

The merchant cannot say I will weigh a package of grapes or a wrapped ham or bacon before your very eyes, and if you are fooled into paying grapefruit prices for cardboard, and meat prices for grease and paper, it is your own fault.

Several cases are cited in support of the argument that wrappers are containers and it is stated that decisions alleged to favor the defendant are not relevant, as they concern other laws than that of New York.

2. The sale of paper at meat prices constitutes a violation of Section 16 of the General Business Law. Section 16 provides:—

Method of sale of certain commodities. All meat, meat products and butter shall be sold or offered for sale by weight. All other commodities not in containers shall be sold or offered for sale by standard weight, standard measure or numerical count, and such weight, measure or count shall be marked on a label or tag attached thereto; provided, however, that vegetables may be sold by the head or bunch.

The dealer has the following alternative:—

a. Weigh the meat separately, and charge meat prices for so many pounds of meat, then put the wrapper on for delivery and charge for the wrapper or not, as he sees fit. The meat packers object to this because of the probability of shrinkage between the time of packing and sale.

b. Sell the wrapper and meat together and mark the weight of the meat or the weight of the whole with the weight of the wrapper.

The plaintiff claims that in the case before the bar he was charged $1.56 for meat, in which was included a payment of 10c. for wrapping. The wrapper, including labor and all, only cost 2½c. Objection is raised to charging for the wrapper and telling the customer he is paying for meat. It is suggested that the price of the meat might be raised so as to cover the charge for paper, provided his customer knows how much meat he is getting, or a special charge might be specified for wrapping.

Evidence concerning the trade custom is regarded as favoring the contention of the people. The brief shows some interesting computations in this connection which indicate how large a loss has been borne by the purchasers. The figures compiled from the figures of the Thirtieth United States Census follows:—

1909—NEW YORK STATE.

Hams, quantity in lbs.	51,636,936
Value	$7,053,027
Shoulders, bacons, sides, quantity in lbs.	59,266,364
Value	$8,064,612

It is estimated that about one-third of the hams sold are wrapped, and on the same basis as existed in the present case, where there was one ounce of paper to every pound sold, this would mean that the value of paper sold in this State six years ago at the rate of 13 cents a pound was $314,954. The paper in the case on trial was sold at 26 cents a pound.

Dr. Reichmann, formerly superintendent of Weights and Measures in this State, has organized a new plan he calls a "Service Department," the object of which is to safe-guard weights and measures. The objects of the plan in brief are as follows:—

1. To maintain the weighing and measuring instruments of whatever form, type or make in correct condition.

2. To issue certificates of correctness.

3. To act as consultants and experts for clients in any matters relating to weights, scales or measures or methods of their use.

4. To act as efficiency engineers in matters of weighing and measuring methods.

5. To make investigations for clients.

6. To keep clients informed on all weights and measures matters of interest in their business.

7. To act as mediators for clients in any weights and measures disputes.

8. To co-operate for clients with the United States Government, State, county or city weights and measures officials.

Of course, it is a private enterprise entirely.

A well-known representative of the California fruit industry who was in New York during the week said it was intimated out there that the dried fruit yield of California for 1915 would reach approximately $22,500,000. The

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Feeling Sore.—It's human nature to feel sore when you're told disagreeable things about yourself, but it isn't human sense to keep up that soreness. If you have a boss who tells you things straight from the shoulder don't discourage him by quitting or holding out a sorrowful frown. The way to stop his hard knocks is to stop the cause. He's trying to get you in line and make you fit. If you hadn't the stuff in you to get in line, ten to one he wouldn't waste his nervous force.

A lot of us are never really tried out till we start working under the leadership of a real business man. Then our second schooling begins. To flare up and display a rebellious spirit is silly. The man is putting you right and the thing for you to do is to see his point and act accordingly.

Study Your Employer.—Get a line on him, so to speak, same as you do with a good customer. Make your ideas work in harmony with his. Perhaps there are not two employers in the grocery business to-day who act and think alike, or whose methods are alike. By conforming to such ideas in a general way you get his good will and his confidence.

This does not mean that you should be without initiative or that you should have no ideas of your own. It means rather that you should avoid antagonism and cultivate a full sympathy with the man who is endeavoring to make a success of his business.

Giving Samples.—Do you know there's an art in disposing of samples even though they may be insignificant samples? I never was very much in favor of throwing them in order boxes. Handing them to a customer along with a few words about the goods is better. It's more highly valued. It associates more directly the store with the goods. It's more of a complimentary affair. Make the most of samples. They cost you nothing.

Can You Print a Sign?—No one can teach you—but you. Practice do it. Commence on common wrapping paper. Every one you make will be better—just a trifle better than the previous one. The first will be something horrible to behold. The fifth will be readable; of course this is a accomplishment isn't demanded by the concerns, but we can't all work for the concerns to start with.

ected yield of dried peaches is 100,000 pounds, of apricots 40,000,000 lbs., and of prunes 130,000,000 lbs.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet and unchanged. Fair demand for August. Coffee easy and quiet. Receipts large in Brazil and prices barely steady. Mills dull and quiet on large stocks. Sugar unsettled and declined both raw and refined.

Raws about $\frac{1}{4}$ c. cheaper and refined 10 points. New seedless raisins priced $\frac{3}{4}$ c. above a year ago. Other dried fruits quiet and unchanged. Apricots firm. Spot salmon easier, in spite of short supplies. Domestic sardines unchanged. All standard canned vegetables weak except corn. Wheat easier and fractionally lower. Flour unchanged and maintained on former high prices. Provisions slightly firmer but undertone weak.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week, except that low grade teas, from lack of demand, are going off somewhat. The general market, however, is still steady to firm, with a good consumptive demand. This course August has not been up to last August, when the war began, causing a tremendous flurry in tea, but it is showing a very satisfactory movement.

Coffee.

The coffee market is still very satisfactory, meaning Rio and Santos in particular. Receipts continue to pile up in Brazil and the situation down there is not at all promising. The market for all grades of Rio and Santos can be held at a fraction lower than a week ago. The demand is very quiet. Mild coffees are unchanged, weak, and ruling on a low level. The demand is quiet, although prices would seem to be a safe purchase. Mochas show a decline of 1¢ a pound. Java is firm and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market shows considerable uncertainty. Apparently the speculation to which the market is now subject is the result of speculators. Raws have declined a fraction of a cent during the week and refiners are now quoting granulated at 5.70. Some of them have held at that right along, but others have not. It looks like there will be even lower prices for sugar in the near future in spite of the fact that we are now entering into the season of greatest demand. The consumptive demand at present is large, as everybody is afraid of the market. Domestic beet granulated is still offered pretty generally at a substantial fraction, perhaps averaging $\frac{1}{4}$ cent below the Eastern refiners' prices.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is quiet and will remain so until the hot weather is over. Prices are unchanged. Sugar syrup is very strong and ranges from 4 to 6 cents per gallon above normal. This is on account of heavy foreign demand. Blackstrap molasses is also very strong because of the demand for it for use in making alcohol. Probably prices are 3 cents per gallon above normal.

Fish.

Norway mackerel are about $1 higher than a week ago, although it is said that some new supplies are on the way, which would naturally tend to lower prices instead of raising them. The advance is due to small supply in this country. Irish and shore mackerel show no change for the week and light demand. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and very dull. Future prices have not yet been named, but will be shortly. One or two packers have named prices on futures of Alaska salmon of $1.40 in a large way, f. o. b. the coast. If the reports of catch are true this price is

You Must Make the First Move

¶ If we only knew who all of you were we'd send everybody a sample of high-grade Coffee and a quotation based on mail dealings entirely.

¶ But we don't, so you must make the first move. We get the best results from matching and quoting on Coffees that have been bought through salesmen. We always shine well in a comparison like that. It is fundamental that the mails are cheaper than salesmen.

low. Spot salmon is unchanged. Imported fish is firm. Norway herring are quoted at around $1.60 as compared with the normal price of $1.15. Portuguese sardines are firm and advancing, as are Norway sardines. Of French sardines there are practically none. Domestic quarter oils show no change for the week; demand light.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged for the week. The price for Maryland 3s, in a large way, f. o. b. on spot, being 65 cents per dozen, with 67½ cents the average price for futures. Demand is poor in spite of the fact that these figures are below the cost of production. Peas are heavy and weak. Large sales of new pack have been made at a very low price and until these have been distributed there will be no heavy demand for them. Reports from Maine show a short pack and the situation is firm. All other grades of canned goods unchanged and quiet. Apples are unchanged and dull. California canned goods, both spot and futures, are both dull, cheap and heavy. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and show no demand.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged and quiet. In spite of every apparent reason for a lower market, the situation is steady. Apricots, peaches and currants are all dull at ruling quotations. The California Raisin Combination are naming a price on seedless raisins of ¾ cent above last year. New prices on seeded raisins are expected within the next two weeks. Seeded raisins are expected to open about like last year.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are a shade higher during the week, due to good demand. Marrows unchanged and very scarce. California limas are working up a trifle and the demand is moderate. Green and Scotch peas dull and unchanged.

Butter.

The butter market is steady and unchanged, while the make continues liberal. The average quality of the present production is unusually fine; consumptive demand is normal and will probably continue good for some time to come. No important change is in sight.

Eggs.

Fine fresh laid eggs are firm at an advance of 1 to 2 cents a dozen.

The percentage of fancy stock is still light and these grades of eggs are being sought for. Medium and low grades are not wanted and are sold at varying concessions. The receipts of eggs are gradually becoming less and the market is firm.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged, with a light consumptive demand. Prices are about the same as about a week ago, with the make somewhat larger than usual at this season owing to the very favorable weather. The market is steady and prospects are that prices will have to be slightly reduced in order to stimulate trade.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are steady at a decline of a quarter to a half on all grades. There is a fair consumptive demand. Stocks are very large and the situation is not firm as the consumptive demand is very moderate. Pure lard is steady and unchanged, as is compound. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are steady to firm at unchanged prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Our agents in Norway report by cable that the first cargo of new catch of Iceland Herrings has arrived there. The herrings are large, fine, fat, and of excellent quality, but prices prevailing are about twice as high as is usual at the beginning of the season. As herrings are so very scarce, and the demand so big, even the high asking prices will not stand in the way of the quick sale of those herrings. From Holland no herrings can be imported as yet, firstly: as prices are very high, in fact too high to admit of any importation, and secondly: the quality is not such that it would be advisable to import these herrings in the United States. Our friends in Holland expect a more reasonable market before long.

It seems impossible to get supplies of suitable Sardines from Portugal at the present time, and stocks here are very insignificant and none abroad. Importers have finally waked up, and now when they are unable to get further supplies for the present at least, they are advancing their prices on what stock they have left, after they have slaughtered their holdings at prices way below European parity. Now, when there is a demand, they have nothing to offer.

On Norwegian Sardines the situation is similar. There are still some cheap lots being offered in the market, mostly of unsatisfactory quality. No cheap Sardines can be had at the present time from Norway, as the catch at present is only the very best quality of Norwegian Sardines. These, of course, are not scarce, but prices are high. When the small available supply of the cheaper grade of Norwegian Sardines is exhausted here (no stocks of those in Norway at the present time) the trade will have to get accustomed to buy a better grade of Sardines, which will certainly do no harm, but will be of great benefit to the trade in general. The price for the highest grades of Norwegian Sardines is so very reasonable, and so very cheap in comparison with other Sardines, that it seems to be a pity that the Norwegians continue to pack some of the cheaper grades, which have never been, and never will be, of satisfactory quality.

Spices.

The market is more active, especially in black pepper. Other articles are moving in a very satisfactory way. Stocks here are small, and buyers must consider the probable delay in shipping. The export demand is also large; therefore, indications really point to a steady and higher market.

Pepper.—Prices are practically unchanged. Demand has been very good. Markets abroad are generally higher than here.

Red Pepper.—In very active demand. The supply continues very small and continued high prices are therefore likely.

Cloves.—Are firmer and in better demand. It is likely that prices will advance.

Pimento (Allspice).—Market practically unchanged notwithstanding it was thought the hurricane which swept the north coast of Jamaica during the last week would do great damage to crops. Telegraphic communication, however, has been cut off and we may have more definite information before the close of the week.

Mace.—In fair demand at generally unchanged prices.

Nutmegs.—Fairly steady. Market value unchanged. Present price we consider safe.

Cassias.—In better demand at steady prices. Saigon is scarce. Batavia is active and firmer in price. China grades are also in fair demand.

Gingers.—In better inquiry. African crop has now been shipped. It is reported to total about 250 tons against 1600 to 1700 tons during 1901.

Green Ginger Root.—In very active demand. The article is scarce and prices are steadily advancing.

Tapiocas.—Fairly steady at prices which are really below import cost.

Paprikas.—In better demand. Hungarian grades exceeding scarce. Spanish grades in fair supply at steady prices.

Seeds, Herbs, etc.—Celery and Thyme have advanced and very likely to be higher. The celery crop is positively short. Quotations from Marseilles fully 3 to 4 cents higher than prices here; therefore, further advances expected.

Laurel leaves and French Marjoram also higher.

Pickling Vinegar.

This window display has both a vinegar and vegetable display. First put a small barrel of vinegar on a strong box about two feet high at the rear of the window. Put a price tag on the barrel like the illustration. Now make a slant of boards from the sides and front of the box to the bottom of the window. Arrange the large vegetables such as white and red cabbage, cauliflower, etc., near the back of the window. Use mangoes to space off the different kind of vegetables. Toward the front arrange the smaller vegetables such as cucumbers, onions, hot peppers and beans. Have a card for each kind, stating the name and price of the vegetable.

Cyler, Texas, Aug. 12, 1915.
the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I desire a little information and know you can furnish which will be very highly appreciated by me.

A party residing here owes me a large grocery account. This party is employed by a Philadelphia shoe concern, and I desire to know whether or not there is in the State of Pennsylvania a garnishment law?

If so, I can manage to sell this account to some live young Philadelphia attorney who could garnishee the salary of the man who owes me and in that way make collection of the amount.

I have used every known means here to make the collection and with no success whatever.

Yours very truly,
SAM V. GOODMAN.

There is no garnishment law in Pennsylvania. The only thing you can do here is to get judgment against your debtor and take him into court and cross-examine him as to whether he has property. If he has nothing except his salary, you are no better off than you were in the beginning.

Selling Eggs by Weight.

A Business-Bringing Plan Proposed.

Johnsonburg, Pa., Aug. 16, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have bought out my father, who has been in business for over twenty-five years. He did mostly a credit business and naturally had to carry a lot on his books. We have about eight pay days a month, so there is a lot of money in circulation all the time, and I have been thinking of having one day each week for a special cash day; everything sold that day for cash and have special prices, etc.

Do you think this would work well with the credit business? I want to do some advertising in newspapers, etc., and do not understand how to get it up in good shape, and if you could refer me to some good book or a publication of some kind that would give me some ideas how to arrange it, etc., it would be a good help to me.

Inclosed find envelope for your reply.

Yours truly,

L. G. MEEHAN.

We believe that a special cash day, on which everything would be sold for cash, might work, provided that the inducements offered were real and substantial. The difficulty you will encounter will be the effort your credit customers will make to induce you to sell them the specials on credit. As to this you should be rigid and inflexible—the minute you give in once you are gone. If the plan doesn't work you can easily abandon it.

The best way to educate yourself to do good advertising is to take some good correspondence course in advertising like that of the Page-Davis Co., of New York. Books with stock advertisements in are all right, but they lay no foundation for capable work.

July Failures Show Smaller Increase.

Outside of Hat Business, All Lines Show More Failures Than in July, 1914, Though Not So Great as in Last Few Months.

The report of July failures is at hand, and with the exception of the hat business every line shows an increase over July, 1914. The increases, however, are not so great in most lines, which is a very clear indication of better conditions.

The figures are as follows:—

General Stores.—July, 1915, 141; liabilities, $767,983; July, 1914, 101; liabilities, $694,803.

Grocery Stores.—July, 1915, 300; liabilities, $1,108,908; July, 1914, 260; liabilities, $713,797.

Clothing and Furnishing.—July, 1915, 136; liabilities, $956,765; July, 1914, 127; liabilities, $953,906.

Dry Goods.—July, 1915, 80; liabilities, $490,253; July, 1914, 48; liabilities, $1,899,394.

Shoes.—July, 1915, 41; liabilities, $237,331; July, 1914, 33; liabilities, $213,500.

Hardware.—July, 1915, 33; liabilities, $282,017; July, 1914, 27; liabilities, $205,605.

The Week's One-Time Ads.

You fellows that have cars, whether they're to sport around in or to deliver goods with—I want you to listen to me while I tell you that if you're wise you'll use Diamond Tires. The only car I own is a baby coach, and as long as that keeps full I don't suppose I'll ever have any other kind of a car, but I know a lot of people that own cars and the talk I hear is Diamond Squeegie Tires. You can buy them at square prices—no fake discounts—and they stand up and give you all kinds of mileage. I suppose every fellow has his mind all made up what kind of a car he'll get when he gets one, and what kind of tires he thinks are best, and all. My tires are going to be Diamonds, as long as they're as good as they are now. I want you to look at the page ad. of Diamond Tires in this issue—there's something in it that you as a tire buyer ought to be interested in. The Diamond people have kept a record of half a million Diamond Tires, and they've put it in a pamphlet and will send it to you. If you care a ding whether you're getting the right kind of mileage for your tire money, you ought to get that pamphlet and read it. Good thing to do it to-day, before you have another blow out.

There's another half page ad. for the Butter-Kist Popcorn scheme in this week. You remember the last one they had. Don't think because this is popcorn there isn't any money in it for you. There's plenty of money in it—sure more than there is in flour, or sugar, or soap at 3 for 10. I tell you hundreds of stores have put in the Butter-Kist machine and are simply coining money out of it. Only requires a little cash—the machine pays the balance out of its own profits. Gee I wish I had a store so I could put one in!

Clean, Uncoated Rice

¶ Retailers who have given Imperator uncoated rice a chance have sometimes wondered why they sold so much more rice with no extra effort.

¶ One reason is that Imperator rice is uncoated—clean and natural—and consumers like that when they once understand it. The other reason is that it is fancy head rice of unusual quality.

BURK'S Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

What I'd Do to Beggars if I Had a Store.

D'ye know, I don't mind these beggars that you see on the street so much—you can get by them without even looking at 'em, if you want to. The beggars that would get my goat are the ones with skirts on that come in your store and goo goo coin out of the drawer.

Of course it ain't any of my business in a way, for I ain't got a store and ain't likely to have one—not this week, anyway. But I see so much of it, and get so het up about it sometimes, that I feel as if it was my money.

One of my customers almost had a stroke before my face the other day because he couldn't say what he wanted to, to a woman that came in. She came in with her leg-pulling smile on and started in to work him. He couldn't say what he had a mind to, and holding it in blame near killed him.

She was a W. C. T. U. woman.

"We're going to give a peach festival on Mrs. Jackson's lawn next Friday," she said, "and you can't guess what one of the ladies said about you at the meeting last night."

Ever been asked to "guess what it is" when you were red mad and wanting to stick a finger in somebody's eye? Gee, but it's jolly!

The boss didn't hump himself trying to guess, so Mrs. W. C. T. U. went on without him:—

"She said I'm sure dear good kind Mr. Shuman will give us part of the peaches."

Then she laid back 'on her haunches, as it were, and he-he-ed.

Dear good kind Mr. Shuman looked as grumpy as an old mare with the colic.

"And they sent me here to see if you would," she went on. "You've always been so kind and generous to us."

"Are you going to buy any of the peaches?" asked dear good kind Mr. Shuman. You see what he was getting at, as they'd only stuck him for part of 'em.

"We hope to find dear good kind friends who will give them all," said the female, laughing like a little devil, and Mr. Shuman's dear good kind face fell like a bum sponge cake. They had him. They always have you and if you think you've got gall enough to turn 'em down, go ahead and try it.

Men don't come to beg these things. If it was men, you could tell 'em to get the hen out of here; nothing doing—"I've got a sore face." It's always these blamed W. C. T. U. women, and P. D. Q. Lodge women, and church women and all the other women—they come bringing in their cheeky touches, with a threat in every word, and you simply have to stand there and swallow it.

"I'll think it over and let you know," said dear good kind Mr. Shuman, and the W. C. T. U. woman went out.

"How many other fruit people are there in town here?" I asked him.

"Twelve beside me that amount to anything," he said.

"All right. What you want to do is to call 'em all up right away, tell 'em about this hold up and ask 'em if they'll stand with you not to give up. Make 'em pay for their stuff for once."

"Huh!" he said in disgust, "these fellows haven't got a bit of backbone where it comes to a thing like that."

"Shame 'em, anyway," I said.

"Oh, no," he said, "no use."

Between you and me, I have a hunch that it was dear good kind Mr. Shuman that didn't have the backbone. Sometimes, if he works up to it, he can look real fierce, but if you stand up to him for five minutes you can get his socks.

"Know what I'd have said to that woman if I could?" he said.

"Nope."

"I'd a said, 'see here, Mrs. Stokes, you've been coming here to me for the Women's Union for two years asking for things, and you've never spent a cent of real money with me yet. If you do buy anything in my line it goes to Jenkins, who's brother-in-law to your president. You don't even buy of me yourself for your own house. You come down here and jolly me about dear good kind and all that sort of thing, but I'm getting a little sick of it. I don't get any trade to speak of out of your members anyway, and you don't seem to be doing much in the temperance line. Why should I keep giving my goods away all the time—does your husband give his hardware away?"

As he went on he talked louder and louder and when he got to the end people began to rubber in from the street. I suppose they thought I was a good member of the W. C. T. U. and I'll bet dear good kind Mr. Shuman thought I was too for a minute, for he acted up and glared at me just as if I'd been Mam Stokes.

He felt a heap better after he'd let that out on me; I was glad he did—it didn't hurt me a mite and it tickled him.

When he was all done, I looked at him admiringly.

"By George, but you're a brave boy, Joe, to stand right up and say what you think like that. I sure do cotton to a man that can talk straight right to people's faces. I know a lot of men that wouldn't have told a woman that for any money; they'd have waited till she went out and then exploded. But just see how you stood right up to her like a man. Gee!"

That made him mad.

"All right," he said, "you come in here and run this store and see what you'd do about it. Why you—I'll bet any money you'd be so big a coward you'd give up before people asked you to!"

Mebbe I would. Mebbe I would. But I don't think so until I'd first tried out a scheme another customer of mine was working the last time I heard from him. He was pestered by these female beggars the same as everybody else, and he stood it until he got sick. Then he fixed up this scheme. When a woman comes in to touch him now, he says "I can't give you anything outright Mrs. So-and-so—I've made a run against that, but I'll give you a thing off on everything you buy of me. That's fair enough, ain't it?"

"How many people took advantage of that?" I asked him.

"One so far out of maybe a million," he said. "A fire company. The others weren't calculating. They buy anything at all, and some of them got sort of miffed because I put it the way I did."

What I'd like to do to the people who try to pull your legs, I had a store, is to welcome 'em with the best bow I could cook up and then say I couldn't think of talking business until they had refreshments, and then give 'em a Pat Green Sunday (that ain't spelled right, I'll bet).

My hunch is that if these schemes that people beg for ain't able to keep themselves by their own members, then they ought to die. There ain't a tiny mite of reason why the storekeeper of the place should keep 'em; lawsy me, they got enough to do to keep themselves.

Good Dry Goods Business is the Outlook.

Marshall Field & Company, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Although there have been fewer merchants in the markets than a year ago, reports from those in indicate an optimistic feeling for excellent retail business this Fall.

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods has not been as satisfactory as that of the corresponding week a year ago, due in a large measure to adverse weather conditions throughout the country.

Collections continue to be satisfactory.

California Growers Believe Prunes and Honey Must Both be Advertised to Consumers

Production Particularly Has Outstepped Demand. If European Trade Drops We Are Left With Enormous Surplus. Honey Handicapped by Retail Prices Which Are High Because of Slow, Small Sales.

California producers of prunes and those of honey—the best crops of both are produced in California—are talking very seriously of doing general national advertising in order to increase the demand for these two products, which has not kept pace with the production.

This is so with prunes especially. Total production in three years amounting to 549,850,000 pounds of prunes only a little more than one-third of 287,757,340 pounds, were consumed in the United States, the remainder, 262,092,660 pounds, going to foreign countries, with Germany as the heaviest customer. Since the war, this foreign trade has almost entirely stopped. This is so because of the trade barriers which prevent the free exportation of goods into the countries at war, but it is almost impossible to get carriers, ocean freight having been increased enormously, and the international banking system has been very seriously affected, credit is an uncertain quantity and may become even more so.

And yet in the face of a consumption reduced almost by one-half, prune orchardists have planted 100,000 acres of prunes within the next two or three years, which will come into bearing and will increase the present crop, produced on 1,000,000 acres, by almost one-fifth. The remedy for the overproduction which apparently exists at present is to be found, according to the statements of many growers, in increased national advertising. By increasing the domestic trade in prunes we can make ourselves independent of conditions abroad, and if foreign trade should again be restored to normal it will simply create an increased demand which will insure good prices. Increased consumption is necessary for the welfare of the prune producers. A succession of good crops has put them in bad conditions under our present market situation, for the carry-over of any crop, whether it is prunes or peaches or apricots, vitally affects the market for the coming crop.

Apropos of this subject the First National Bank of San Jose, Cal., has sent out a letter to some of the more influential prune growers, reading in part as follows:—

We have an enormous American consuming power and in former years this took the bulk of our product, but we neglected this when Europe overbid in prices and our domestic demand has become dormant.

American trade follows American advertising, and "breakfast foods" have become the popular demand because they have been advertised largely.

We can build up a similar demand for our dried prunes and apricots (of which we produce the best) by systematic advertising. If the Boards of Supervisors and the Chambers of Commerce would spend their advertising funds this year on such a campaign, it would do those who put up the money more good than a continuation of bidding for tourists.

The honey business is pretty much in the same condition. The growers complain that retailers in the East hold prices up and thus restrict consumption. They admit, however, that the root of the trouble is that households as a rule buy little honey at a time, and that infrequently and irregularly. Consequently the grocer does not and can not sell it at a small profit, as he does flour, sugar and other staples. He can not afford to, and will not do it except on goods which turn over rapidly, without effort and without waste. Honey kept on grocers' shelves a considerable time will granulate, and it is of little use for the salesman to assure the customers that that is a sign of perfectly pure honey. They do not dispute the fact, but it does not interest them. They want honey that will pour, and not candied honey.

It is said that all the bee journals in California are agitating a plan to advertise honey to the consumer, much as California raisins and oranges have been advertised.

325.—Workmen's Compensation Acts and the Small Employer.

An Error Corrected.—Before beginning this week's article, I wish to confess to the making of a perfectly inexcusable error in some figures in the recent article on "The 80 per cent. clause in Fire Insurance Policies." After explaining the theory on which calculations were made, under this clause, I wrote this paragraph, among several others (the others were correct) by way of illustration:—

Suppose your stock again to be worth $5,000, and you carry only $2,500 insurance—50 per cent. instead of 80 per cent. of the total value. If the loss is $3,000, you will collect $1,500, just 50 per cent.

This should have read—"If the loss is $3,000, you will collect $1,875, just 62½ per cent." The error was wholly stupid and I can only hope it was so obvious that nobody was deceived by it.

To my mind the most important legal development for a long while, remembering the large number of business people of all classes which it affects, is the workmen's compensation acts which have already been passed in about thirty States, and are being passed in more all the time. Probably within a comparatively few months, all States will have a workmen's compensation law.

The States which have already passed a compensation act are: New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Wisconsin, Arizona, California, Massachusetts, Maryland, Nevada, Oregon, Texas, West Virginia, Ohio, Washington.

The reason for the extreme importance of these laws is that they completely change the relation of an employer toward his employees. He is now practically helpless to defend himself against the expense of accidents which may happen to them while in his service. If the accidents happen, he must in most cases pay for them. The theory which the law goes upon, in enacting these laws, is that the employer, called upon now to face this virtually certain expense without chance of defense, will add it as an item to his cost account, and the public will pay it, which, says the law, is as it should be. Incapacitated workers should be maintained by the public. And employers generally are rather accepting this view, and are not worrying much inasmuch as they are expecting to collect all the expenses of the new law from the public.

In some States the workmen's compensation act applies to any employer large or small, except a farmer and the employer of domestic servants. The little retail grocer who has one clerk beside himself is as subject to it as the Baldwin Locomotive Works. If his one clerk, through his own gross carelessness, gets a hand cut off in a meat chopper, the employer must go on paying him a percentage of his wages for several hundred weeks. This is so in the great majority of the States. A very few, like Rhode Island, apply the law only to employers with more than five employees. Nevada applies it to employers with more than two employees, but most States apply it to all.

In some States, as in Oregon, an employer is not actually forced to pay for his employees' accidents under the workmen's compensation act. That is, all employers are not—with employers in the hazardous employments it is made compulsory, but other employers—such as merchants, and artisans generally—can take their choice: pay under the compensation act, or allow themselves to be sued for damages in the old way. The law in Oregon and most other States that do this, however, says to the employer, "if you reject fixed compensation and take a chance on being sued, you will be deprived of your usual defenses if you are sued." Of course this indirectly makes it compulsory after all, and it is therefore expected to bring the employer into line for the fixed compensation.

What I mean by depriving an employer of his usual defenses is this: Take Pennsylvania before a workmen's compensation act was passed. John Jones is a merchant employing clerks. One of them in passing through a shipping room, falls through a trapdoor and breaks his leg. On the ground that it was negligence to leave the door open, the injured clerk sued for damages. The employer could defend on three grounds:—

1.—The door was left open by another clerk, who was a fellow servant of the clerk who was hurt. Under the law I am not responsible for injuries caused by fellow servants.

2.—The clerk was himself negligent (contributory negligence) in not seeing that the door was open and avoiding it. Therefore he cannot recover damages.

3.—The clerk knew that the trapdoor had to be open more or less, and in passing through the room he assumed the risk.

Many and many a suit for damages has failed because the employer successfully raised some or all of these defenses. And in all justice, certainly the second one should be raised. An employee who is hurt because of his own carelessness ought not to be allowed to put the cost of his injury on his blameless employer. But under the workmen's compensation acts, the employer who goes into court to defend the suit of an injured employee, has almost no defense at all. Except "the accident didn't happen," which of course would be impossible in most cases. The wilful misconduct of the injured employee causing the accident, is another possible defense, but wilfulness not easy to prove.

The course under all the acts, to paying for employee's injuries is substantially the same, though details differ. In most States employer must pay for any accident happening to an employee if it arises out of the employment. Occasionally exceptions are made where the accident was intentional caused by the injured employee's own act, or by the wilful act of fellow employee, or where it was caused by intoxication, or—in Kansas—by wilful failure to use safeguards provided by the employer. The Ohio law goes to the limit.

It provides that the employer must pay for "all injuries not self-inflicted received in the course of employment causing disability beyond one week or death."

In all States the disability caused by the accident must continue at least one week and in most States it must continue two weeks. The period provided for the payment of part wages to the employee varies. In Pennsylvania, for instance, 66 per cent. of the regular wages must be paid for various periods, depending on the injuries. For the loss of one hand, it is 175 weeks. In case of death a lump sum to the relatives.

Practically all the State laws require the employer to furnish some sort of guarantee that the payment will be made. This is done by taking insurance, sometimes in a State insurance fund created by the act, and sometimes in any company that an employer may choose. In some States an employer who can show himself abundantly solvent is exempted from the need of taking insurance.

Telling it to Your Customers

It is the purpose of National Biscuit Company advertising to tell your customers, wherever you are, just what N. B. C. products are and how good they are. This creates a demand for N. B. C. crackers, cookies, wafers and snaps—by name.

But it does more. It makes selling easier and quicker. Customers know just what they want—no time wasted "wondering" what to buy.

Have National Biscuit Company products in sight—they help to make business good.

New Castle will present the name of J. C. Norris as a candidate for State President.

The New Brighton Association will be represented at Meadville by O. L. Barnes and Fred J. Roth.

J. Allen Brandt, President of the Pottstown Business Men's Association, has severed his connection with Dives, Pomeroy & Stewart, and is now sales manager for the Schultz Baking Co.

Lock Haven Association has admitted forty-six members since January. There will be a net gain for the year, but a small one owing to death and other causes.

The picnic of the Berwick Association on August 11th was a great success. Everything was free, even transportation.

The Royersford Business Men's Association has arranged for an outing for its members and clerks on August 19th. Stores will be closed all day.

Milton has a newly formed Business Men's Association.

The Pittsburgh Butchers' Association will be represented at the convention by a full quota of delegates and in addition, twenty-five of its members will attend.

Mr. Smedley addressed the newly formed Business Men's Association of Royersford on Monday, August 9th. There was an attendance of about fifty, and the meeting was an interesting one. The meeting was called to order by President James B. Richards, and the Secretary, William Jacobs, read the minutes of last meeting, after which Mr. Smedley made an address. This was followed by short talks by John Wagoner, president of the Borough Council; H. C. Saylor, councilman and druggist; C. W. Bailey, Jacob Peterman, J. A. Buckwalter, A. F. Tyson, of Spring City, and V. P. Blundin. Royersford is an enterprising town and its merchants are live wires. It is expected that great good to the community and merchants will result from this association.

The Business Men's Association of Tarentum, have established permanent headquarters on Wood street. These will be opened all day and a card of invitation has been sent broadcast inviting the people to make use of them to meet their friends, to wait on trains and street cars, to rest when tired, to use the phone, write letters, to leave or send packages to. This is a step forward for progressive Tarentum, and is another link in the chain of service which is welding citizens and merchants close together.

New Castle will be well represented at the State convention. E. O. Jones and C. E. Jones have been elected delegates.

The Philadelphia Grocers' picnic at Willow Grove on August 11th was a big success. Every visitor had a good time.

The Frankford Retail Grocers' Association will hold a family picnic at Maple Grove Park on August 25th.

The Inland Grocers' Association, Altoona, will be represented at the convention by Geo. H. Nugent, the efficient secretary of the organization.

A word or two this week about advertising schemes, inspired by a little device which fell out of the pigeon hole in which I keep the matter sent in to this department. It is a gelatine or rather a celluloid capsule, transparent, looking precisely like those in which the unlucky ones among us take medicine from time to time. Inside is a rolled strip of paper, bearing the following:—

I started to talk about advertising schemes, using the Pomerantz capsule as a test. Human nature is such that I suppose possibly nine out of ten people—I'm not sure that it wouldn't be ten out of ten—will open a thing like this when they come across it. That is an illustration of the value of curiosity to the advertiser who can invoke it. And they will read what is inside, if it is short. I have no doubt that get direct business. Then once in a while he will spring a little scheme like this to give general publicity and help the work along. The scheme gets business whatever—it is useless expect it to—but it keeps Pomerantz before the public and makes people think of his store first. Schemes are good things in their place. I know advertisers who never use any other kind of advertising. Somebody happens to meet them on the street and mentions one of their schemes they think they are getting returns, but they aren't. Returns like that are mere flashes in the pan—they seldom increase a business. The ideal advertising method for an advertiser in a small town or city, or an advertiser in a restricted neighborhood in a large city, is regular advertising calculated to get orders, mixed with occasional bit of cleverness for sake of emphasis.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

POMERANTZ, 52nd and Walnut Sts. ARE YOU HUNGRY?

"Pomerantz" is a pretty clever advertiser. I have seen considerable of his stuff, and if I remember rightly, have reproduced some of it in this department. His advertising has that individual touch that is worth its weight in diamonds, and that every advertiser should work night and day to get. The big advertisers pay thousands of dollars every year to hire it, but hundreds of advertisers, even small advertisers, have it naturally, if they would only strip the husks off it and develop it.

everybody who opened the Pomerantz capsule read enough of it to know that Pomerantz the delicatessen man, was behind it. Right here is the point I want to make about advertising schemes—that is all they can be expected to accomplish, and the advertiser who expects them to do more is going to get left. My judgment is that Pomerantz uses advertising schemes exactly as they ought to be used. He does regular advertising all the time. As I remember it, it is advertising of goods and prices, calculated to

$75 for a Window Display

And you sit down and can't decide whether to make it or not! Altogether we will pay $175 for Lipton Tea Display as below, capital prize $75.

It is the most important Window Dressing Contest ever held. When you see how easily these prizes are won, you will be exceedingly sorry you did not win one.

The contest is for the five best window displays of Lipton's Tea. Here are the conditions:—

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes September 1, 1915.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes—is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

How to Sell and How Not to Sell Goods by Telephone*

W. J. Sheldon, a Telephone Expert, Gives Some Common Sense Talk on the Telephone as a Business-Getter and a Business-Killer.

In presenting this paper, it is my aim to help the merchant develop a telephone trade, whereby you can profitably employ your telephone to increase sales, facilitate purchasing and thereby strengthen your efficiency and cut down operating costs.

One of the greatest time savers and efficiency builders is the telephone. A great many of you can no doubt remember its introduction into the world in 1876 at the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, at which time it was considered a mere toy and you have seen its rapid development from one hundred thousand stations in service in 1884 to two million in 1904 and nine million in 1915, with a range in service from one room to another in 1876 to the recent wonderful achievement of talking from the Atlantic to the Pacific. This one invention, gentlemen, has done more to build up our nation's successful commercial life than any other factor.

The merchant of years ago sent his salesman with a wagon loaded with merchandise to the smaller merchants within a radius of perhaps twenty-five miles, showing his wares, telling his funny story and possibly making two or three sales per day. With the advent of the railroad the salesman simply took samples of his merchandise and stopping in a town, the merchants would come to the train and make their purchases, the car being kicked off on a siding. Competition in selling brought speedier methods, the salesman taking such samples as he could conveniently carry and catalogues of their stock. The merchant then placing his order for future delivery. To-day the modern merchant may call his wholesaler in the larger cities in the morning by telephone and have his goods shipped the same day, thereby getting a fresh supply more often and making it unnecessary for him to carry a large amount of stock with the resultant tying up of a goodly portion of his capital.

We all know it is easy to buy by telephone, but have you ever given the selling by telephone thought any consideration. Retail dealers have led the way in aggressive selling methods by telephone by making it easy for the consumer to buy, by advertising "Buying by Telephone," etc., but this is not all. How many of you really make it easy for the customer to purchase from you by telephone? Think it over, observe some day how your clerks answer a telephone call. If you were greeting a customer coming into your store would you blurt out "hello." What do you want? No, indeed. You would extend your hand and say, "Good morning, Mr. Jones, I am more than glad to see you to-day. What can I do for you?" and your face would beam smiles and your every action would be one of trying to show him that you were one of the most accommodating persons on earth, and after he had purchased what he came in for you would make a strong effort to induce him to purchase other items of your stock. "It's the voice with the smile that wins."

Why not follow up this policy in answering your telephone calls. Courtesy is like oil to machinery. The lack of it will cause friction and friction in telephone talking is a thing to be avoided. The proper way to answer your telephone is to say "Smith, Jones & Co. Mr. Jones speaking." That identifies you at once and the person you are calling is ready to hear what you have to say. No matter what the message is, treat it courteously.

If the merchant will give a little more attention to his telephone trade he will soon see results. There is one thing of great importance in selling by telephone, that is, truth. If the housewife calls you up and asks if you have some real nice cantaloupes to-day and you know that they are not real nice, don't lose her confidence and perhaps her trade by sending an inferior article. Better explain to her in the beginning.

I have often heard the remark made, "Oh, I can't buy from Jones by telephone, because I can't depend on him sending what I ordered." Now wouldn't it be better to gain a customer's confidence and show them that they can buy just as easily by telephone as if they come to the store. This selling by telephone proposition is not confined to any one line, but practically every commodity in daily use can be bought and sold by telephone. I have in mind a certain grocer at Pottsville, who, when asked why he did not carry green truck, remarked that it did not pay him in his section of the town. He said he used to buy a reasonable quantity, but his customers would still go down town to purchase. I suggested to him that when he had anything in this line that he call his several customers by telephone, explaining to them what he had, in which case they would no doubt be glad to purchase from him. He has followed this out with very good success, not only in the green truck line, but with grocery specialties. The housewife, too, appreciates this because she feels that the merchant is taking a personal interest and is really desirous of her trade.

There is one point I want to impress upon you and that is that to-day more merchandise can be sold by telephone at less expense to the merchant than in any other manner and remember that, "It's the voice with the smile that wins."

Domestic Sardine Packer Says Rotting Fish Have Been Packed

Warns Trade to Look Into All Cheap Trades Offered Them. Considerable "Red Feed" Fish Have Gone In Cans, Though Forbidden and Unfit for Food. Got Maine Inspection System.

A large sardine packer of Eastport, Me., has made during the week a serious charge concerning the quality of much of the domestic sardines packed during the last few months, considerable of which is still to be marketed. He declares that many packers have packed what is known as "red feed" fish, which are fish containing a substance that rots the stomachs of the fish. The rotting proceeds after they are put in cans, and completely spoils them for food. A new system of inspection has been begun in Maine to prevent sardines of this sort from being packed, but the packer referred to says that large quantities have been put in tins and will be offered to the grocery trade. His statement follows:—

As we see the situation, there have been considerable quantities of fish to be had, but with the vigorous inspection of the factories which is now taking place under the supervision of two inspectors, one from the Bureau of Chemistry and the other from the State of Maine, the output of the sardine factories has been very largely curtailed, and at this writing all the factories along the coast are closed down, cleaning up for next week. Fish that contain "red feed" are absolutely forbidden in the manufacture of sardines, and many loads that arrived full of this feed have been sent to the fertilizer. This means that though there may be fish trapped they cannot be taken from the water until they have worked this feed out of them, and as this involves holding the fish from 24 to 48 hours, there will be many times during the balance of the year when the factories will not be operating.

There is another feature also and that is that there have been large quantities of red feed fish packed this spring and during last fall (the fish were so feedy last fall that we closed our factory a month before the end of the packing season rather than pack such stuff, but many of the other factories worked their hardest on those fish) and many of these goods have still to be placed on the market, if the reports we hear are so. It is probably this poor stuff that is being offered at the low prices which are reported being made to-day. Not only is there inspection taking place here in Maine at the point of manufacture, but these goods are going to be inspected through the thousands of retail stores throughout the country and we would strongly advise you to caution all your buyers to look many a time at any cheap lot of fish that is offered them, and to be very careful to have themselves so protected that if the goods are seized they will not lose anything through the transaction. Anything offered too cheap should be questioned very sharply.

Salad is scarce and very high—per box. A few weeks ago you could hardly give it away at 50 cents.

NOTE.—This is part of an address delivered before the Pottsville (Pa.) District Convention of Retail Merchants last week.—Ed.

United Profit Sharing Corporation Sues Southern Cotton Oil Co. for Ceasing to Pack Coupons in Wesson and Snowdrift Oil

United States Court for an Injunction Forbidding Company From Selling Oil Without Coupons. Southern Co.'s Defence. It Used the Coupons for a Year and Spent $80,000 on Them.

There is a pretty fight on between the United Profit Sharing Corporation of New York and the Southern Cotton Oil Co., packers of Snowdrift and Wesson cooking oil. It comes about by reason of latter concern's refusal to carry its contract to pack United Profit Sharing coupons in all packages of its cooking oils. As a result the United Profit Sharing Corporation applied to the United States Court at Trenton, N. J., for an injunction forbidding the Southern Cotton Oil Co. from selling either Snowdrift or Wesson oil without coupons in.

The Profit Sharing Corporation alleges that the oil company manufactures two products and that a contract was entered into under which it was agreed that the oil company would place coupons in its packages for five years. At the expiration of the first year, it is alleged, the defendant announced its intention of abandoning the proposition. During that time the oil company paid to the complainant approximately $80,000 for the coupons, which were placed in upward of 1,000,000 packages.

Another allegation is that a large amount of money was expended by advertising in newspapers, periodicals and on billboards the fact that coupons were placed in the product of the defendant company. Much, it is alleged, that millions of persons have been acquainted with the fact that the coupons were placed in the packages, and contemplated action will result eventually to the complainants. The Southern Cotton Oil Co. has issued a statement, since the suit was brought, admitting and explaining its decision to drop the coupons. The statement is as follows:—

drift and also with Wesson Oil. No coupons for your customers are inclosed and there are no merchant coupons for you in this case. The United Profit Sharing Corporation will redeem their coupons which you have already collected, but it is not the intention of The Southern Cotton Oil Co. to issue any more.

It has come to the attention of The Southern Cotton Oil Co. that United Profit Sharing Coupons are being used as "trading stamps" in certain sections of the country—that is, purchased by the retail merchant and given out, as trading stamps are, with all or certain purchases made at his store.

We had taken the precaution to insert in our contract with the United Profit Sharing Corporation a clause which we considered prohibited the use of United Profit Sharing Coupons as trading stamps by retail grocery stores. We do not wish to be identified with any coupon premium plan that is also a "trading stamp" plan and so have discontinued United Profit Sharing Coupons promptly and without previous notice to you, the retail merchants handling our goods.

We believe in profit sharing—and we adopted the United Coupon plan because that seemed to be the right way to take you into "partnership" with this company and make it to your advantage to help us sell our goods, and share the profits in proportion as you sold the goods. But making the retail merchant pay for a trading stamp or coupon of any sort, is certainly not our idea of profit sharing. On the contrary, it seems to us to be a heavy burden on the retail dealer who must pay for his stamps out of his already narrow margin of profit. Trading stamps may be all right for your business, or you may think them all wrong. This company proposes to leave that entirely to your good judgment. To avoid any possible confusion, we will not use a profit sharing coupon that might be confused with a "trading stamp" proposition.

In fairness to the United Coupon and the manufacturers who pack it with their products, we should explain that, at this time, the United Profit Sharing Corporation is selling its coupons to retail merchants to be used as trading stamps only in certain localities. If you feel that our decision to discontinue United Coupons works any injustice to you, please take the matter up with our salesmen or write to us here in New York.

The United Profit Sharing Corporation denies that it is selling its coupons to be used as trading stamps in violation of any contract with the Southern Cotton Oil Co.

WITH THE EDITOR

This paper believes in co-operative buying because it believes that money can be legitimately saved by it, and this is not only the aim, but the need of every merchant in business.

We do not believe, however, that the plan reported last week, in which some eighteen local jobbers have joined to buy co-operatively, will succeed; certainly not in cases where the members of it are already carload buyers. If they are carload buyers they are already getting as close to bed rock as they can hope to.

All manufacturers, and perhaps all jobbers, make a lower price on most merchandise for one hundred cases than for ten, and for ten than for one. And often a carload buyer can buy cheaper than a buyer of half a carload. A co-operative movement will pay therefore, when it puts a one-case buyer into the ten-case class, or a ten-case buyer into the carload class. It will also pay the l. c. l. buyer whom it puts in the carload class, by getting him a lower freight rate.

But in the case of eighteen jobbers, all of whom, let us say, are already carload buyers, where is the saving to be made? They are all getting the carload price, and the average manufacturer will not quote less for five or ten carloads, particularly when it is not new business. And of course the freight rate will be the same. The only saving to the manufacturer will be the slight curtailment of book-keeping, which would amount to nothing. The jobbers' big chance is to form a selling combination, which would eliminate some of the present excessive competition.

The "Wood and Willowware Trade Review" makes the following comment upon a recent utterance of this paper:—

An Explanation.

On the front cover of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" this week appeared the following: "The most expensive advertisement a merchant can have is a reputation for giving good weight and measure. It is deliberately creating a reputation for generosity and then trying to live up to it." Whadaya mean—"good weight and measure"? Think thou that a merchant thrives best with a reputation for giving bad weight and measure?

Not at all, friend, not at all. We think a merchant ought to have no particular reputation on the subject. In other words, it should be simply accepted by everybody that his weight and measure were correct. Perhaps when we said "good" weight and measure we were not as explicit as we might have been. What we really meant was heavy weight or measure—more than even.

No better illustration of the harm which unbridled competition can do is to be found than the canned tuna fish situation. Canned tuna is undoubtedly a comer, to use a colloquialism. Without doubt it is destined to take a place, and that quite soon, among the staple food products of the country. Its progress is being somewhat interfered with by the fact that every manufacturer in the business, if they tell the truth, is selling his product below cost. When asked why, they all point to the Van Camp Packing Co. A few months ago Van Camp was selling his brand of tuna at $7.50 per case of 48 one-pound flats. He made what he called a gentlemen's agreement with the other packers, by which tuna prices were to be kept at about a certain point. Van Camp kept the agreement, but the others secretly broke it, using it, when they had to, merely to gain an advantage for themselves. When Van Camp was convinced of this he cut his price to $5, with other sizes in proportion, and all the other manufacturers had to follow. We repeat—if the packers tell the truth, everybody's tuna prices are below the cost of production. One packer has already failed, and it is said that others are not in a very satisfactory condition. The mistake was in making the gentlemen's agreement, or in breaking it after it was made, depending on how you look at it. The whole situation is foolish, for tuna is wanted, and would sell about as well at a profitable price as it would at the unprofitable price.

There is a rather vague and indefinite conference going on at Byberry, a suburb of Philadelphia, under the auspices of the "Philadelphia Vegetable Growers' Association." It aims to learn the real reason for the high prices of fruit and vegetables, and to remove it. Participating in the convention are farmers, produce commission merchants, club women and a grocer or two. The following is an extract from a newspaper report of Wednesday's session:—

S. Herbert Starkey, a market gardener who said he had followed his products all the way to the consumer to find out who got the high prices, gave the following list of profits which he claimed were made by retail merchants: On corn, 100 per cent.; cabbage, 200 per cent.; tomatoes, 60 per cent.; eggplants, 150 per cent., and onions, 140 per cent.

Retail merchants rushed to the defense of their class by declaring that their losses on unsalable goods made high prices necessary. They also said that delivery and other expenses robbed them of most of the profits in the produce trade.

Without doubt retailers charge large profits on fruits and vegetables. Some retailers charge excessive profits. The Vegetable Growers' convention can easily cure this. All it needs to do is these four little things:—

1.—Persuade the Creator to make the quality of fruits and vegetables regular so that one half peck from a basket will be as good as every other half peck.

2.—Or persuade the growers to pack them that way, throwing away all that are below standard.

3.—Or persuade women consumers to be as well satisfied with the bad and indifferent fruits and vegetables as with the good.

4.—Or persuade consumers to buy all of a retailer's stock before it can spoil, or to buy it of him at the same price after it does spoil.

Only these little tasks confront the vegetable profit reformers; and they will without doubt come down, of course, until they surmount the retail distributors of produce, in finding their profits, will have to consider the present risks of the business.

Progress of New Jobbers' Co-operative Buying Plan.

Authentic List of Members. Some Disavow Connection. Purity Oats Co. Said to Have Yoked Up With It.

Some of the jobbers named last week as possibly being connected with the new co-operative buying movement among jobbers, disavow all connection with it. Notably these are Thomas Roberts & Co. and J. Frank Shull Co. It will be remembered that this paper did not say positively that these firms or any others were connected with the plan. We merely said that Mr. Pincus, the manager, showed a list which he said were those who were not connected with it, and which of course opened the way to the inference that all the others were connected with it. Mr. Pincus did not say this, and it appears now that it was not a fact, but the inference was inevitable, nevertheless.

It is understood that the Purity Oats people are selling the combination, whose members are selling Purity Oats at $1.30; the regular price is $1.40. Certain other manufacturers will also make concessions, if there is any business to gain by it, and particularly if the co-operative buyers will give the goods an extra push.

An authentic list of the members of the jobbers' co-operative plan was obtained during the week. It is as follows: Comly, Flanigan Co., Gillespie & Son, Jonathan Graham & Son Co., Samuel Howland Kirk, Foster & Co., William Montgomery & Co., Reeves, Parvin Co., Charles Shaw & Son, James Crawford, Githers, Rexasmer Co., W. J. Graham & Co., H. K. Logg's Sons, Lippincott & Co., John Price & Co., Wilson & Richardson, John Scott & Co., G. R. Danenhower & Son, Camden, N. J.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s
Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Weather Conditions. — Relatively making, we have to study the weather and conform to its condition about as easily as the dry goods people. On a rainy day out hangs the red umbrella of the furnishing store, along with a raincoat, and when the snow flies rubber signs in the shoe store window. When the thermometer gets up to 80 and over, what do we do? We pile up paper. We open more lemons. We move the bottles of soft stuff up front. We stick a big sign in the window that reads: "Ready Cooked Cold Meats." And we ask people to come in and have a glass of iced tea, just to prove how good our blend of tea tastes when iced. We hear a lot about mental suggestions, but that's too slow for our business. What we want to deal in is the real thing, and the real thing must be in the face, and if necessary, we must stumble over it—figuratively speaking.

Suggestions?—Why, a live grocery should be suggestions from front to back.

She may not buy any of these dainty looking California pea beans you had on display to-day or to-morrow, but your suggestion was good, and when she's pea bean hungry she'll think of your show. That's the secret of it.

Grade Your Stuff.—Grade your cucumbers. Grade your apples. Grade your cantaloupes. Grade your pineapples. If cukes averaged a cent and a half apiece, that's no argument for selling them as they run two for 5. Some are worth 3 cents, some even a nickel, and some, of course, three for a nickel. If 45s cantaloupes figure you a dollar delivered, you're not going to let them pick them out at 5 cents. You're going to do your own picking. Your going to mark a lot of them at four for 25 cents, five for 25 cents and six for 25 cents.

It's this grading and ticketing and everlasting study that shows any kind of a decent profit on the fruit stand.

You know what a melting day does to your stuff and you know what a rainy day does. These conditions have to be met "before and after."

More About "Days."—You know to run a live grocery successfully and to keep the term "live" alive, you have to be in the "progressive" class. In other words, you mustn't be a standpatter. If you are progressive and your firm is extremely conservative by virtue of "long standing," your hands, in a measure, are tied.

"Live" people are looking for him. Therefore we suggest "Tomato Day."

A big stir can be made with "Tomato Day." Here in our town the writer made a kind of tomato festival. Vines strung all out the front of the store, with green fruit on them. Any number of cards stating "Tomato Day." But particularly a price on the 15-quart baskets that was at once a winner. Fortunately, the grocer in our case entered heart and soul into the scheme, and this is half the battle.

"I Forgot."—Don't let that be an easy thing to say. Say it with shame and with a determination that it won't happen again in a hurry. The best of men forget—occasionally. But the habitual forgetter has no successful future. Mark this well. It shows the power isn't where it belongs. It proves that the money paid for service has been mispaid; and a mispaid employee doesn't last long.

Hardly anything irritates the manager more than to have the words "I forgot" blandly given him when a follow-up question is in order. Write your instructions down, sir.

Moore's early grapes from New Jersey and Maryland are ranging from 8 to 9 cents a small basket. California Malagas are $1 to $1.25 per 20-pound box.

Can be put on to any Apple, Orange, Grapefruit, Cantaloupe or vegetable crate, without tools, nails or screws.

Then by placing the boxes on top of each other, you create an attractive space-saving Display. Ask for literature and prices.

The minute one of your customers sees a brand of cocoa advertised on a billboard, he's nearer sold than if he hadn't seen it. When he not only sees it again but reads about it in the papers or the magazines, he is vastly more receptive than a customer is when you start in to sell him an unknown brand.

Every bit of the work done by the manufacturer for advertised brands lessens the work of the retailer. Think that over.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD"

Palatable Tidbits From a Winter Short Course on Retail Merchandising

Some of the Best Things From a Course of Lectures Which the Jobbers and Manufacturers of Sioux City, Iowa, Gave the Retail Trade of That Section.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained, through the courtesy of the Tolerton & Warfield Co., Sioux City, Iowa, a stenographic report of the winter short course of lectures to retailers which the jobbers and manufacturers of Sioux City recently gave the retail trade. The lectures were all on some phase of the question of merchandising, and many of them were exceedingly helpful and interesting. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has made a considerable number of extracts and will present them from time to time in tabloid form.—Ed.]

Next comes a man's ability to meet his bills when due. The man worth nothing, but with a good salary or wages is pretty safe; provided he pays as he is paid and does not go in debt to such an extent he cannot meet his bills. This condition more frequently applies to the customer of the city merchant than the country retailer. A case was brought to my attention not long ago that was rather interesting. A certain switchman in the city of Sioux Falls went through bankruptcy. It appeared that his average wages were somewhere between $75 and $80 a month, and five grocers of that city had allowed him to run up bills varying from $50 to $100, when his total income ran from $75 to $80 a month. When questioned as to how he managed to get that line of credit he said, "Gee, these merchants are easy." If a farmer has a farm heavily mortgaged, if he is a one-crop farmer and raises little stock, it is a pretty good thing to watch this farmer carefully, and to see that he disposes of his income in the proper way and uses it to liquidate his debts instead of purchasing a lot of extra things that he does not need. One merchant told me a short time ago that he was in business in South Dakota for seven years, that he started with $1,500, allowed himself a salary of $100 a month, and when he sold his business he had cleaned up during those seven years the nice little sum of $18,000 in real money. When he came to wind up with the bank, the banker said, "George, I would like to have your old accounts to collect." He replied, "Sure," and reached in his pocket and handed over one account for $18.96. That was that man's sole and only account left over, after over seven years in trade. If this man could do that in a territory that was not overly prosperous and that had had in those seven years at least two partial crop failures, surely others can do it in more prosperous communities.—By H. K. Zupfinger, who spoke on "Retail Credits."

I don't suppose there has been any other article that has been abused more than the pineapple. So many dealers will simply throw it down in a box without any effort to display it. There is no excuse for this. They require absolutely no fixtures except these little trays that you could make out of cracker boxes if you cared to. The regular sizes I use are 12 x 24 and 14 x 24.

If you have been thinking that a fruit display is not fitted for a small country town, I want to disabuse your mind. The size of the display can be governed by the population, but there is no town so small but that this style of fruit display can be used. I have had experience in towns of 500, and the same experience in cities of 1,000,000, and the only difference you need to make is in the size of the display. If you are in a town of about 3,000 population, you want to use about ten trays, in a town of 500 a lesser number. The size of the town and the number of customers should regulate the number of trays used for a display of this kind.

I have had people say, this is all good stuff, this fruit. How do you keep it looking fit? I have managed to do this in Chadron, a town of about 3,000 people. One man asked me this question: How do you manage to keep fruit up like this in a small town? Suppose a lady comes in and says she would like to buy a dozen oranges. After she has gone of course your tray is broken. So you step around behind your window and take twelve more out of the box and replace them. You may say, that is all right, but how are you going to keep that fruit in the bottom part of your tray from going down? I say, circulate your trays. Just as soon as you find any fruit that shows any deterioration or shrinkage, move the tray. In case I found the clerks did not use the tray next the glass until the fruit begins to show signs of going down, I would pull it back and put a fresh one in there. Take a tray from the back pile that is pretty fresh and pull the front pile back, and they will begin to sell that, and the first thing you know they have sold it all.

There are some points that must not be overlooked about making a fruit display of this kind. For one thing, your window must look reasonably well filled. Another point is your color scheme. I arrange fruit in alternating colors. I have always found that attracts the public eye. It gives expression to the window. It has an effect upon the buying public. There is also another thing that I have found. I have a row of bananas along the front edge. There is a reason for that. There is no other fruit, nothing of any kind or nature that will take the place of the banana in finishing that window display. In making your window display, in the average window you have got to keep your trays back about six inches from the glass. If you crowd it up too close, the glass does not admit of making the same kind of display that it does when you keep it back about six inches. There has got to be a border finish to that fruit display, the same as you have a border for the paper on the wall. If you have ever seen how badly a room looks before the border is on, you will know how this display would have looked if the bananas had been left off. The bananas have another mission in filling that case. It frequently happens that windows become frosted over or clouded over and you have to get to them. Often times it is a difficult matter to move the heavy trays of fruit to get at the window or to replace with fresh fruit. On the other hand you can pick up a bunch of the bananas, and you can replace it quickly with fresh ones, where a tray is hard to handle. In building up a display of this kind, it is always necessary to raise the back of the stand to support six inches higher than the front. Then either build in pyramid style, as I have here, or run high at each corner. We have had better results with this sort of display.—By F. H. De Rhodes, who spoke on "Window Displays."

AMONG THE TRADE.

A farewell dinner is to be given on Monday evening, August 30, to Mr. H. G. Flint, until now Philadelphia sales agent for the Shredded Wheat Co., lately appointed general sales manager for the same concern with headquarters at Niagara Falls. The scene is to be the Bellevue Stratford Roof Garden, and the committee in charge is W. H. Ro James P. Curry, A. C. Unger, M. Warren, George Nowland and S. H. Frowert.

Apples are plenty, but good apples from West Pennsylvania are bringing good price—$3 per barrel. Jerseys worth 25 to 50 cents per basket.

The Week's One-Time Ads.

I've got a crack-a-jack scheme this week to get business for you fellows. It's run by the Practical Advertising Co., Springfield, Ohio, and has set the West afire. Now they're going to try it on in the East. The point about the scheme is that without any flashy fuss, it gets you big business at a profit. Read in their ad. what some Western grocers did with it—one Illinois fellow collected $1,700 in one day with it, and a Kansas grocer sold 277 boxes of a new corn flakes one day through it. Going some, say. No cut prices, either—even thing sold at full prices and regular profit. Every one of you fellows, if you love me, will send the coupon at the bottom of this ad. and let them send you the description of their plan. It doesn't cost anything and it may answer the question some fellow sent in last week—how shall he meet the Economy Stores. JIMMY MAND.

How Community Betterment Helps Retailers.

Des Moines, Iowa,
August 26, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—There is no subject before the American public to-day of greater moment than that of community building and community betterment, and certainly no class of business men should be more vitally interested in the welfare of the local town and community than the retail merchant.

Retail merchants throughout the country are losing business to their competitors in the great cities largely because the people of their own towns and communities are thoughtless, and anything that will cause the people about them to stop and think soberly on the proposition will be of material benefit to the merchant.

The National Community Betterment Association will greatly appreciate your co-operation in making National Community Day, Sunday, October 3d, a memorable day. On this day the association is asking the co-operation of all good citizens in making the occasion worth while. Local newspapers throughout the country are being supplied with bulletins bearing on this subject. Mayors of towns and cities are being asked to issue a proclamation calling attention to the day, and ministers are asked to call attention to the vital subject of community building and uplift from their pulpits.

The association will appreciate your co-operation in calling your readers' attention to National Community Day, Sunday, October 3d.

Yours truly,
NATIONAL COMMUNITY BETTERMENT ASSOCIATION.

Business Taxes in Pennsylvania.

Wilmington, Del., Aug. 25, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Kindly publish answers to the following: What license and tax is a merchant required to pay in Pennsylvania?

In what issue is the effect of the new net weight law discussed, as relating to selling goods in Pennsylvania? Simply state in a few words, if possible, the above.

Thanking you for the favors.

Respectfully yours,

The only license which a Pennsylvania merchant must pay, as a merchant, is the mercantile tax, which is a tax on the amount of business which he does.

Hospitals Want High Grade Food.

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 19, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—As the editor of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" you cannot but be interested in such an article as has been written for the September issue of "The Modern Hospital" by John Phillips Street, of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station.

It may also interest you to learn that superintendents and other hospital officials are now more intensely interested than ever before in giving their patients food of the highest quality—food that is not only nutritious, but also of a character and so served that it will stimulate the appetite, please the eye, and through its variety make an appeal to the mind, because in the feeding of the sick and convalescent the mental appeal is of great importance. In view of the fact that the daily average population of the hospital field (including patients, nurses, resident physicians and employees) is more than 1,000,000 people, and that during the course

One Argument Against Stevens Bill Answered.

New York, Aug. 19, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In an interview in a New York newspaper, Mr. John P. Kirby, of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, which is composed of department stores, is reported as saying:—

Merchants are waking up to the evil nature of the Stevens Bill, and opinion against it is increasing. Price maintenance would not allow the retailer to adjust his prices to meet conditions. In a cool season, for instance, when light clothes are selling slowly, the dealer would not be allowed to reduce his price so as to stimulate his sales. He might be compelled to keep his stock on shelves until it became worthless.

This is not the first time that Mr. Kirby has been reported as making misstatements respecting the Stevens bill. If Mr. Kirby is correctly reported in this latest statement, he must have spoken with the deliberate intention of misleading the public, for he knows that there is nothing in the Stevens bill that would justify his statement. He knows that the Stevens bill expressly provides that in case of deteriorated goods, the dealer may sell them at any price he chooses, provided he has first given the manufacturer an opportunity to take them off his hands at what they cost him.

Mr. Kirby is doing the standard price cause a positive service in using tactics and methods which are so susceptible to exposure as intentional misrepresentation, and which cannot fail to react upon the predatory price cutting interests which he represents.

Your readers are entitled to know the facts, and to be protected from false statements concerning the Stevens bill. The inclosed copy of an editorial from the current issue of the "National Hardware Bulletin," official organ of the National Retail Hardware Association, shows how effectively and promptly that organization is showing up to their members the true character of this organized opposition to the Stevens bill.

We ask your co-operation in the interest of truth.

Yours faithfully,

EDMOND A. WHITTIER,

Secretary American Fair Trade League.

The United Profit Sharing Groceries Corporation has filed a schedule of its assets and liabilities in the bankruptcy court. The liabilities amount to $10,748.36 and the assets amount to $6,642.47. The collapse of this concern was told in recent correspondence.

It was organized under the laws of Delaware last June with an authorized capital stock of $2,000,000. A chain of 200 stores was to be established in New York alone, with a lot of co-operative schemes for consumers. The plan never had any success whatever except to sell a little of its stock.

The apple commission men are still discussing the scheme of the New York State Department of Foods and Markets to open up markets and compete with the commission men. The commission men appear not to be very much worried at the prospect, claiming that all the business which the State Department can get will not amount to much compared to the general business which will still be done through the commission men. In showing the way in which middlemen's expenses push up the final selling price, a large dealer analyzed the charges and profits made in the sale of apples as follows:—

Of the $5 which a certain barrel of apples might bring in the market if sold at once, 30 cents, on an average, must be allowed for freight, 25 or 35 cents for commission and 7 cents for cartage. This allows only about 5 per cent. profit to the dealer, he said, and is as low as the contract price made by the State Department of Foods and Markets with the Fruit Auction Co.

When a barrel of apples is held for some months and then sold for $5, was the statement, the following charges must be allowed: 30 cents freight, 50 cents cold storage, 7 cents cartage, 10 cents shrinkage, 7 cents labor and reworking, 25 cents commission, 10 cents insurance and interest, making a total of $1.44.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea unchanged and apparently not quite so firm, as the demand is now quite small. Low grade Ceylons are weak.—Coffee improved slightly on valorization talk, but the feeling is still very heavy, and prices a fraction lower than a week ago, though reacted slightly from the lowest point reached.—Sugar unsettled. Refiners were selling granulated as low as 5.50, but advanced late in the week to 5. Raws slightly lower for the week.—Canned salmon slightly firmer short catch talk. Domestic sardines unchanged.—All canned vegetables quiet and inclined to be easy excepting corn, which is firm.—Dried prunes steady to firm. Light demand for these and all other dried fruits.—Wheat about unchanged.—Flour in fair demand prices about 25 cents below highest point.

Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Commissioner Warns Against Bad Vinegar.

Says His Agents Have Bought Samples and Found Many Bad.

We have recently had purchased in the open markets of Pennsylvania 235 different kinds, brands and makes of vinegar, two thirds of which have been analyzed and the balance of the samples being examined by our chemists.

I desire to call your attention that portion of Section 2 of Pennsylvania vinegar law which relates to "all vinegar made wholly or in part from distilled liquor." The law requires that it shall be branded as "distilled vinegar," and all such distilled vinegar shall be free from coloring matter and shall contain not less than 4 per cent by weight, of absolute acetic acid. This is the law on the subject of distilled vinegar, and distilled vinegar must be labeled "distilled vinegar" and sold and billed as such and by the retailers sold as distilled vinegar. We find this product some times labeled and sold "white vinegar," "amber vinegar," "red vinegar," and under various other names, when the law says it shall be labeled, branded and sold as "distilled vinegar."

There will be a number of prosecutions where the law has been violated on the points indicated above.

I desire to call your attention that portion of Section 1 which has been interpreted and construed by the courts of Pennsylvania to the effect that no cider vinegar can be sold in this State if it contains added water, drugs or acids.

Dairy and Food Commissioner Harrisburg, Pa., August 26, 1915.

Brazilian Government Will Launch New Valorization Scheme to Eliminate Coffee Surplus. Novel Scheme to Organize Co-operative Delivery Schemes. Apple Discussion Still Waging. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, August 27, 1915.

News has been received in this city during the week that the Brazilian Government has practically approved a valorization plan by which the present very large surplus of Rio and Santos coffee would be practically eliminated from the market until market conditions make it possible to sell at a profit. The plan authorizes the Government to facilitate the operations of the Bank of Brazil as a discount agency, and also allows exports of Rio and Santos coffees to be limited for the time being. According to rumor it is planned to cut down the exports of Santos several million bags, and that part of the crop which would ordinarily have gone to Germany and Austria will be held off the market, instead of being allowed to stay in Brazil and depress prices all over the world. The plan will involve the advancing by the Government of between 30 and 40 million dollars, which will be used to loan on stocks of coffee up to probably 60 per cent. of the value.

In principle the plan does not differ from the old valorization plan, which advanced the prices of Brazil coffees several cents per pound, but was finally withdrawn on account of opposition from the United States Government.

Speaking of co-operative delivery systems, a company is operating through this State with a very interesting plan. Its business is the organizing and operating of co-operative delivery systems anywhere where there are sufficient retailers to support it. The concern has organized plans of this sort in Hornell, Penn Yan, New York and Lyons, N. Y., and is going out for more towns as soon as possible.

The prime mover in the plan is Harvey W. Baxter.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. All values are steady and firm, and a regular demand is reported every day.

Coffee.

The coffee market is weaker and Santos 4s are now quoted green and a large way below 7 cents. This is the lowest price which has ruled probably about two years. Rios are equally depressed. The reason for the continued piling up of the surplus in Brazil, and the fact that there is a very large stock of coffee waiting bound for this country. Unless the Brazilians can formulate some sort of a plan like a valorization plan to take the surplus coffee off the market, values are going to continue heavy and depressed for an indefinite time. Mild coffees are a shade easier for the week, practically on account of the depression in Brazil. Mocha is about unchanged and not especially strong. Java is strong and scarce, and is not figuring much in the demand.

Sugar.

The sugar market has gone to prices again during the week and the refiners are selling granulated as low as 5.50. This is a drop of from 30 to 40 points. All refiners are not selling at this price, but nearly all is asking more than 5.60. Prices have declined somewhat, but not as much as refined. It is difficult to predict the future of the sugar market, as speculation enters into it to a considerable extent, and nobody knows exactly what to expect. The consumptive demand for sugar is not large.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week and so is compound syrup. Sugar syrup is still high and promises to continue high during the fire fall and winter season. The foreign demand is responsible. Molasses is dull and unchanged.

Fish.

Norway mackerel show no change from a week ago. The market is steadily maintained as supplies are not abundant. Cod, haddock and haddock have not yet weakened for the season. Demand is very light and prices unchanged. Salmon is where it was a week ago, both as to spot and future. There has been no general naming of future prices on Alaska; same will be done early next month. Imported sardines are firm and unchanged. Domestic sardines are still ruling at low prices. Demand dull.

Canned Goods.

The tomato market continues somewhat depressed and prices range from 65 to 67½ cents f. o. b. in a large way. These prices are below the cost of production and buyers are beginning to pay some slight attention to that fact; demand fair. Corn steady to firm with advices of shortage in certain sections, notably Maine. Peas are heavy and low. Apples unchanged and quiet. California canned goods show no improvement in price or condition. The situation is inclined to be depressed. The demand is very small. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and quiet.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are fairly well maintained as to price, both spot and future. The demand is dull. Some raisin business has been done owing to the naming of new prices on seedless. Other dried fruits very dull and unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are a shade higher on account of bad weather in the growing sections. The quotation to come forward is about $3.15 in a large way. Marrows are unchanged on the previously reported high basis. Supply low and demand fair. California limas are also a shade higher on account of unfavorable crop conditions. Green and Scotch peas are in small demand at unchanged prices.

Butter.

The butter market is firm and unchanged with a good consumptive demand. The receipts have been liberal during the week and the average quality fine for the season. The market is healthy on the present basis with no important change in sight.

Eggs.

The receipts of eggs have fallen off considerably and in consequence

A BOOSTER CLUB CAMPAIGN IN YOUR STORE

Here is the biggest trade winning, cash getting, sales making force, offered to retail dealers. It works for Hardware Dealers, for Druggists, for General Merchants and for Grocers with equal facility.

One Grocer in Kansas sold 277 boxes of Corn Flakes in a single day as a special through this method. This was a new brand of goods.

The Peoples Trading Co. of Minnesota had the biggest Pork & Bean day ever experienced by any merchant in that state, by the use of the Booster Club methods.

G. W. Baker, an Illinois merchant, had collections in excess of $1,700 for one day.

One member of a campaign in a Kentucky town brought a merchant more than $6,000 in new cash trade.

These are only a few of the things that are accomplished by this whirlwind, sales building force.

In addition merchants clean out their slow sellers, unload unprofitable stock at full prices, and often make the cost of the campaign many times over from what they would lose if they put on a cut price sale.

Think of the additional value that you will get by selling more of your better merchandise at full price, at regular profit, by the use of this method.

the market for fine eggs is 2 cents higher. There is an increased consumptive demand and considerable decrease in the production, so that market conditions are firm.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged with only a moderate consumptive demand. The quality of the current make is about as good as usual, while the make is reported much larger than usual. Prices, therefore, are from 15 to 20 per cent. below a year ago. There is nothing in sight to cause any radical change.

Provisions.

There is a normal consumptive demand for everything in the smoked meat line, but stocks are reported larger than usual, and the market is only steady on the present basis. If there is any change it will likely be a slight decline. Pure lard and compound are steady and in fair demand. Dried beef, canned meats and barreled pork are all unchanged with light demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

We have had a very quiet market for the past two months on evaporated apples; in fact, there has been less summer demand in a good many years. The lack of export demand has also demoralized future trading, and at the present time it is impossible to tell where prices will be this fall. We have a light crop of apples which are of very good quality, and it is feared that the bulk of the crop will be shipped fresh. Some shippers are quoting new goods on the basis of 7¼ cents per pound for prime quality packed in 50-pound boxes. There is no buying interest.

Spot apples for shipment from cold storage are obtainable at from 7 to 9 cents according to quality.

The stock of evaporated raspberries is light, the bulk of the crop being shipped fresh. The demand, however, is limited, and the market is barely steady at 21 to 22½ cents, f. o. b., in barrels. Evaporated red raspberries are quotable at from 28 to 29 cents, f. o. b., in barrels.

C. C. HALL.

Rochester, N. Y.

Rice.

The rice market is passing through the usual dull season, partly due to the holiday period incident to this time of the year and also because the new crop receipts are coming forward very slowly, and buyers are disposed to play a waiting game, knowing by the experience of previous years that with any accumulation of rough, prices must fall away. Although the market on new crop opened lower than for several years, there is a feeling that prices will go still lower, therefore the trade is disposed to operate with conservatism and caution.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast show a slight improvement over last week. Stocks of old rice are getting very low and attention is being turned to new crop, although as yet no sales of new crop have been reported.

At New Orleans the market continues steady, with prices unchanged. The supply of clean being very light on account of non-receipts of rough, no large business has been reported. Rough rice is coming in very slowly, owing to the delay of harvesting operations by recent rains. At this point it is reported that damage to the growing crop has been slight and with favorable weather heavy receipts of rough are expected during the next week or ten days.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, considerable damage to the growing crop by heavy rains has been reported. Some sections of Louisiana estimate a damage of 15 per cent., and Texas, in the vicinity of Galveston and Port Arthur, claim the crop to be damaged from 15 to 80 per cent.

D. TALMAGE'S SONS CO.

New York and New Orleans.

Sugar.

Franklin, American, Howell and Warner are on selling basis fine granulated 5.60 cents, McCahan's, Pennsylvania, Arbuckle and Federal selling basis 5.50 cents, all for prompt shipment, assortment with order. About noon Thursday Federal advanced their price to basis 5.60 cents, which was immediately followed by Pennsylvania and McCahan. These refiners, however, continue to accept business for prompt shipment at basis 5.50 cents, but intimate may become firm most any time.

Raw Sugar.—The market continues quiet and steady, with very little sugar offering. Holders in most cases are asking equal centrifugals 96 test 4.70 to 4.77 cents, duty paid. Buyers, however, show little or no interest at the moment.

Late.—Federal say will go firm at 5.60 cents at the close to-day.

Sale reported to Federal 16,000 bags Cubas prompt shipment at equal 4.70 cents, duty paid.

Standard Canned Goods.

Weather conditions throughout this section during the week, if not beneficial, have not been harmful to the tomato crop. There was a light frost in the Western part of Maryland, but it did not reach the section where tomatoes are grown for canning purposes, but the temperature for several nights dropped below 60 degrees, a very unusual occurrence here in the month of August. The extent of the damage done to the crop by the severe rain and wind storms, previous to this week, was greater than was at first reported, and, in consequence, the canners are much concerned. The undertone to the market prices was firmer at the close of the week, causing a better demand for the goods, with indications of increasing activity in the coming week. Tomatoes well bought are half sold, and intending buyers will have no regrets later on because of purchases made at to-day's quotations.

The canners show a disposition to mark up their prices because of the prevailing conditions, and the jobbers show more willingness to take hold when convinced that a change for the better is likely to occur. Not a cannery in all this section has been operated to capacity, as yet, and many of them have not turned a wheel to date. Usually, every cannery here is at work full blast by the middle of August, and the shortage in the output may not be easy to overcome in September. The season is young yet, however, and a long open fall season may show results that are not now anticipated. The largest buying this week was done by the Western jobbers, and all of their orders called for prompt shipment.

No other lines of vegetables were active this week, but there was steady buying, in small lots, of green string beans, wax string beans, sweet potatoes, spinach, and none of the other articles were overlooked. The same storms that hurt the tomatoes also damaged the corn crop, and the canners claim that it cannot recover the loss. There will be no famine in canned corn next winter, however. Cheap peas are still wanted, but the higher grades are dull.

Maryland peaches are abundant this season and the quality never was better. The market prices for the new pack are low enough to tempt liberal purchases of them, especially the pie peaches and seconds, but the buying has been light up to this date, as compared with other seasons. Some yellow peaches of extra choice quality, in heavy syrup, are now being packed, and the fruit is of the highest flavor. All of the other fruits were dull this week, without any new developments or price changes of consequence. Apples are now coming in, but the larger pack will not be made until the fall months. The crop of pears will not be ready until late September and October.

Cove oysters continue to be very quiet; prices unchanged.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The Scotch and Irish herring fishing is done principally in the war zone. Consequently very little fishing is now being done, very few herrings are being brought ashore. Consequently, Scotch and Irish herrings are shipped to the U. S. A. only in negligible quantities, particularly so because prices are enormously high and shippers find ready sale for what little herrings they have at fancy prices right on the spot, so we shall have to reckon with a scarcity of Scotch and Irish herrings, at least for the present.

Our expectations for lower prices for Holland herrings have not been realized. So far about 89,552 barrels have been landed, against 99,201 barrels last season at the same time, and the price for herrings in Holland is just about twice as high as it was last year at the same time. Before we can import any Holland herrings we must wait until the market settles down to a more normal basis.

In regard to Norway mackerel, we have no further news, but we should have cables from our agents at an moment that they have had some catch.

The sardine situation, unfortunately, remains the same without change from our last report. Sardines are scarce all around. No catch in Portugal; absolutely no fish there that would suit the American trade. Stocks here are very small, but owing to the advanced prices the demand is only fair. Were the demand as big as usual at this season of the year, we would see sky high prices for Portuguese sardines. French sardines are, of course, a negligible factor, because only very few small lots are coming over, and they are really reasonable in price and very fine in quality. Consequently, whatever comes over of French sardines is sold very readily, and there is mighty little.

In Norway at the present moment they are asking crazy prices for their goods. They seem to have a tremendously big demand from Germany principally, and Germany seems to be paying all kinds of prices and taking all kinds of goods, irrespective of quality and price. We, of course, have to be more careful, because competition here regulates the price; but one may take

Grape Juice and Root Beer Display.

This window display is a good one for a grocer who handles bottled stuff, such as grape juice, ginger ale, root beer and sarsaparilla. First cover the bottom of the window with green crepe paper. Build a little arbor in the rear of the window of building laths and twine some grape leaves around if possible. If they cannot be had, use artificial leaves. Make a sign card like in the cut to hang beneath the arbor and another one between two buckets filled with the two beverages selected and cracked ice. Sell from the buckets and replace with other bottles. At each side of the rear of the window make pyramids of root beer and grape juice in the bottles. There really isn't much to this display, but it will be much more effective than a stuffy window display would be.

or granted that all the cheap sardines are out of the market; that is, up sardines of good quality. What left here is trash, poor stuff, which is worth even the money that is asked for it. There is a fair supply of the first-grade Norwegian sardines. Prices for Norway sardines are high, both abroad and here, and are sure to be higher.

STROHMMEYER & ARPE CO.

Spices.

The market fairly active during the week. There is a continued uncertainty as to foreign relations. This applies to foreign exchange as well as to ship-dates. Prices are likely to vary. Our advice is to keep normal stocks of all articles in the spice line.

Peppers.—Spot supplies are steadily increasing. There have been some recent arrivals, which were practically as soon as they landed. There is a strong stock obtainable and Siam grade is also scarce. White peppers in fair demand at unchanged prices.

Peppers.—Are in big demand and prices will remain high.

Cloves.—In fairly active demand at slightly but unchanged prices. It is expected there will be a great delay in the receipt of new crop cloves, which will probably have a tendency to advance prices.

Allspice.—We have no reliable advice from Jamaica concerning damage done to new crop due to the late hurricane. The market is therefore practically unchanged. Present prices we consider very low and safe. More active and in better demand. Prices steady, but unchanged.

Peppercorns.—In very good demand at present. Supplies of all grades here are abundant.

Peppercorns.—Saigon quiet, but firm in price. Batavia grades are in better demand. China bark fairly active and prices unchanged.

Peppercorns.—The demand at present is strong. Prices, however, are unchanged during the week.

Ginger Root.—Continues scarce in good demand. Prices very firm. Cloves.—Are firmer here, but prices still held well below import cost. Stocks unusually small. Siam grade practically out of the market. Spanish grades are in fair demand at unchanged prices.

Herbs, Etc.—Foreign prices on cumin and coriander, as well as others, are higher than here. The demand for active demand will soon be met when the limited stocks are cleared, it looks as though very high prices will rule on many articles throughout the list.

MARKET NOTES.

Corn is scarce and brings 75 cents per basket, or $1 per basket. Last week it was little more than half that.

Tomatoes are glutted and poor—5 cents per basket. No Rocky Fords in market yet.

First Canned Tuna Failure.

Several months canned tuna fish have been selling at considerably below cost of production, owing to a fight between the packers. What is said to be the first fruit of this fight developed last week in the voluntary bankruptcy of the Monarch Canning Co., a packing concern at Wilmington, Delaware Harbor, Cal. They packed the De Luxe brand. Staple half-pound tuna, which up to this season sold around $1.40 a dozen, this year is being offered at 90 cents and below. Some cut prices have been materially under 90 cents, and it is claimed at these quotations that tuna packers are losing money.

Rice Can Be Sold as "Unpolished" Only If It Bears Neither Glucose Nor Talc But Most of Its Natural Coating.

Agricultural Department Says Considerable Misunderstanding Exists as to the Difference Between Uncoated and Unpolished Rice and the Coated and Polished. It Will Try to Remove This.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

August 26, 1915.

According to the Department of Agriculture, there appears to be a widespread popular misunderstanding, which they will now try to correct, regarding the meaning of the phrases "unpolished rice" and "uncoated rice."

The polishing process, as understood in the Orient and by the best authorities in this country, refers to the rubbing or scouring of the hulled grain in various machines by which most of the bran coat or pericarp is removed. The resulting product is often coated to improve its appearance. The coating process consists in the application of glucose, talc or other foreign material to the surface of the already polished grain. The people of many localities in Asia use true unpolished rice; that is, rice from which the hulls and part, but not all, of the bran coat have been removed. Such an article is sold to a slight extent in the United States, but the market supply is composed principally of polished rice, most of which has also been coated with talc or glucose or other coating material. Polishing removes a considerable portion of the protein, fat, fiber and inorganic salts, as well as flavor, from the grain.

The rice question has aroused considerable interest in this country because it is believed by many investigators that the disease known as beriberi, which is common in the Orient, is due to the consumption, as the main article of diet, of rice that has had the bran coat completely removed.

The phrase "unpolished rice" will be held by the bureau to mean only rice which still retains a considerable portion of the bran coat or pericarp. Natural brown rice is properly designated as "unpolished rice," but the phrase "unpolished rice" is not synonymous with "uncoated rice." Rice from which all of the pericarp has been removed but which has not been put through a finishing process by the addition of glucose, talc or other foreign material, is a polished, uncoated rice. It should not be designated as "unpolished rice."

Rice which has been put through a finishing process by the addition of glucose, talc or other foreign material should bear a statement to this effect. Attention is called to Food Inspection Decision 67 on "The Polishing and Coating of Rice."

Bad Weather Hurts Dry Goods Business.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Wholesale dry goods distribution has been lighter in volume during the same week a year ago.

Unseasonable weather continues to effect retail selling adversely.

The total number of buyers in the market this week is less than a year ago, although the South and Southwest is much better represented with buyers and they are purchasing freely.

Current collections are about normal.

The promise of large crops is lending a healthy tone of optimism to fall business.

Beware How You Sell Canning Compounds to Housewives.

Department of Agriculture Issues Warning Against Them, But Admits That There Is No Law Preventing Their Sale or Their Use Within a Home. Thinks Grocers Have a Moral Responsibility.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

August 26, 1915.

Information has come to the Department of Agriculture that the canning season has brought the usual demand on the part of housewives for salicylic acid and boric acid. These preparations are sometimes sold in the form of powder under various trade names and are recommended by the promoters for use in preserving canned goods in home canning. In the directions for use the housewife is told to fill the jar with the fruit or vegetables, cover with water, and add a teaspoonful of the preserving powder. While it is true that these compounds may retard the decay of the fruit or vegetable, it is pointed out by the experts of the Department that their use may be attended by serious disturbances of health. Salicylic acid is well known as a poisonous substance, and one of the evils which may accompany its use is derangement of the digestion.

The Federal Food and Drugs Act prohibits the use of harmful preservatives in foods that enter interstate commerce. The food law of nearly every State in the Union forbids the sale within the State of foods that have been preserved with harmful substances. Neither the Federal or State food laws apply to foods that are canned in the home and consumed there. It would seem, however, that the housewife would not knowingly use, in the foods she provides for her family, substances that she could not use in foods for sale without violating the law, because these substances are injurious to health and the Department therefore believes that grocers who sell these powders should clearly explain their character to their customers.

Give Your Jobber a Square Deal and Other People Will Give You One

Little talks between wholesalers and retailers on the ethics of fair business—what is square and what is tricky?—Doing unto the jobber as you would have him and other people do unto you.

No. 50

There are undoubtedly retailers—happily not many—who have already made up their minds to refuse certain future goods when they are delivered, not because they do not conform with the specifications, for, of course, they can't tell that now, but because the market has declined since the purchase.

Some time remains for retailers who can bring themselves to do such a thing, to reflect upon their course. Let them ask themselves three questions:—

1.—Is such a course fair? Would they like to be similarly treated by their own customers?

2.—Is such a course business-like? Ought not a contract once entered into, to be kept?

3.—Is such a course honest? Will their reason for refusing the goods be the true one? If not, are they not in the position, when they advance that reason, of obtaining an advantage under false pretences?

There is only one course in business that is safe, sane and square: Think well before you sign any contract, but when you have signed it, stick to it till the end.

Selling the Rich Trade.

I sell all sorts of people in my business—big people, little people, and people that sell all sorts of trade. Far be it from me to talk about myself, which is something I never do, but if I do say it as shouldn't, I think I know something about business the way different stores run it.

One day last week I was in a store waiting for the boss to get through with another salesman. I can't understand why these other salesmen will butt in and keep the boss from paying attention to me. However, I sometimes have sport listening to what goes on.

This salesman was trying to sell the boss a fine line of stuff. It wasn't imported stuff, but it run about the price of imported.

"I tell you I can't sell stuff like that," said the boss. "My people won't buy it—they can't afford to buy it. I wish I could do business with the kind of people that would buy that kind of stuff, but I don't, and that's all there is to it. My trade are mostly working people. Good people all right—I'm not saying anything against them—but they can't buy jam at 30 cents a tumbler."

After I got in and got my little order, I said something to him.

"I heard you tell that New York man something a while ago," I said, "that shows you're in wrong. You said you'd rather sell rich people that can afford to buy high-priced stuff, didn't you?"

"Sure. Wouldn't anybody?"

"Nobody that ever sold both kinds, and knows what they are," I said. "I'll take the working class every time."

Then I told him about a customer that does, I guess, close to $50,000 a year, two-thirds with rich people. He sells some millionaires. Anybody to look at him from the outside would think he had the bulkiest cinch a man could have. Why he's always hard up. I never knew him when he wasn't worried about money. He always has enough on his books to buy the Philippines, and he never knows when he's going to get it in; that's the worst of it.

He told me last month about two of his customers. One of 'em had gone down to Maine for the whole summer and the other one was on a boat somewhere for six months. Together they owed him something like $1,500. He couldn't bone 'em for it—that's a fearful insult—and the blame pigs can't seem to think anybody can need money. So he carries 'em and kisses their feet when they throw their checks at him months after they're due. Great, ain't it?

It would be fine if he had capital enough to carry people like that, but he ain't got enough. He never discounts a bill and he's behind with his jobbers all the time. Worried? Why tell you the truth, I wouldn't want his business at all.

He has some customers that make it a regular rule to pay him once a year! What d'ye know about that? How'd you like to carry your people a whole year?

"Well you can bet your neck I'd charge 'em a fat price for that kind of accommodation," I said to him when he told me.

"I do that," he said, "but that don't make it any easier—I still have to get the money somewhere to carry the account, don't I?"

I didn't see why he couldn't borrow from a bank enough to carry it, and I told him so, but it seems he's in so deep all the time that he ain't a good risk. Why I believe that fellow would be happier working for somebody for wages. I sure do.

I told all this to my friend who thought the rich trade had everything on the poor.

"Not on your life!" I said, "gimme the family where the father works steady as carpenter or brick-layer and makes $22 or $25 a week. I mean the sober chaps, understand. The kind that live in a nifty little two-story house that would rent for around $15 a month in the country. Nice, respectable people. The father gives mother so much a week to run the house on, and she runs it on that and it's there every Monday morning. That's the life! Good honest trade, none of it fancy, but with your money coming in regular when you want it. None of these rich guys for me. They think you ain't anything but servants anyway. If I had a store and some millionaire tried to walk over me and stand me off for six months. I'd hire a lawyer and get out an attachment against his silk socks; that's what I'd do. I couldn't live peaceable with those people for five minutes. I'd sell 'em just so long as they kept up to my rules, which would mean that I wouldn't sell 'em at all, I suppose.

Hawaiian Pineapple Day is November 10th.

The Hawaiian Promotion Committee is boosting "Hawaiian Pineapple Day," which has been set for Wednesday, November 10th. The Hawaiian Promotion Committee is doing good work to increase the consumption of Hawaiian canned pineapples in the United States, and in a special circular giving publicity to "Hawaiian Pineapple Day," says:—

On that day the Hawaiian pineapple will be elevated to royal honors and proclaimed the King of Fruits. On November 10th we will place on the tables of the President of the United States, the Governors of States and Mayors of large mainland cities, delicious bowls of sliced pineapples.

We believe that no menu, on Wednesday, November 10, 1915, will be complete unless its array of eatables includes many dishes composed of the juicy Hawaiian pineapples. Last year practically every large hotel and café in the United States, and every railroad dining car and steamship dining saloon headed their menus "Hawaiian Pineapple Day," in red letter Grocery windows from Boston to San Francisco presented Hawaiian pineapples to the gaze of the passing public.

We ask you to join with us in this celebration, by jotting down the date now and thus help us show the world that the "Paradise of the Pacific" has a new industry designed to satisfy mankind's "sweet tooth." This year of 1915 we are ready to bombard that "sweet tooth" with 2,500,000 cases of canned pineapples.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The Lock Haven Association adopted the following for presentation to the State convention:—

Whereas, The retail merchant assessed and compelled to pay fixed sums toward the support of the locality in which he does business and said assessment is in part based on amount of business done; and

Whereas, A large amount of business is done by itinerant vendors, or persons who sell from door to door, which business is not assessed or taxed; and

Whereas, This makes an unfair discrimination against the retail merchant who is also taxed to support all the improvements in each locality; and so be it

Resolved, That we ask the Legislative Committee of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association to prepare an act and introduce it in the Legislature, assessing an annual tax on all persons engaged in vending on the public highways or peddling from door to door, and that the support of other retail mercantile organizations in the State be solicited in securing favorable action on this proposed act.

Over 10,000 persons attended the picnic of the Berwick Business Men's Association. It was a highly successful affair. This event will be long remembered by the participants and will do a lot towards binding the business people and citizens of Berwick closer together. Everything was free, even transportation, and every visitor fed at the expense of the business men.

The Belwood Business Men's Association has elected the following officers: President, C. F. Moore; president, C. W. Sausser; treasurer, O. L. Weaver; secretary, J. C. McLand; assistant secretary, G. A. Jamison.

The scope of the association is being broadened and a new Constitution and By-Laws adopted. It is expected that the coming year will be one of great progress.

H. C. Westphal, for two years president of the Jersey Shore Business Men's Association, has resigned. It was accepted and a vote of thanks tendered for his service.

Williamsport had a successful "Day" on August 19th.

The Pottsville Association has arranged for a reunion of old soldiers and sailors of Schuylkill County at Fallsville on Labor Day. It is expected that many thousands will honor the

M. Brady, an active grocer, has elected secretary of the Williams-Grocers' Association.

Steelton Association has arranged for an outing on September 23d.

Ashland Business Men's Association has affiliated with the State Association. Mr. Geo. Neidhammer is now secretary of the Ashland Association.

Smedley addressed the newly organized Association of Business Men of Pottsville on Tuesday, August 17th. The meeting was held in the hall of the L. C. A. and was attended by over 100 of the business men. President Meyer called the meeting to order and introduced the speaker. At the conclusion of the address remarks were made by several of the members. Organization was then completed. The petition for charter signed by those present, directors elected, etc. The organization will be known as the Milton Business Men's Association. A guarantee fund of $500 was provided for plans were made for active work. Several attempts have been made along the line of associated effort heretofore, but have failed in accomplishment. This time will be a success. President Meyer, Vice-President Ralzer and all officers are wideawake business men and will certainly work for success. Pottsville is a splendid town and a town of opportunity and the new association endeavor to give it a larger space on the map.

Williamsport retail grocers held a successful outing on August 18th at Lakeside Park. The Organizer was present and he was expected to make an address but it was deemed wise to omit speaking and let everybody enjoy themselves. A bounteous dinner was served to all with the compliments of the merchants. There were reports of the success of the manufacturers were in force, loaded with samples, which were given out to all. All the wholesale grocers were present and a great deal of fraternity prevailed.

Williamsport grocers are a fine lot of business men, and while the organization is not as strong numerically as it could be, it does good work for its members.

The second district convention of the merchants of Schuylkill County was held at Lakeside Park, Mahanoy Junction on August 19th. The Mahanoy City Business Men's Association was the guest of the Mahanoy City Business Men's Association. The day was clear and cool and while a good attendance was looked for, every one was agreeably surprised at the turnout. 600 were present and it was a real sensation. Mahanoy City sent a lot of automobiles, which paraded from Mahanoy City to the convention hall, passing through many towns en route. The automobiles were gaily decorated. Ashland sent a good delegation, as did Pottsville, Tamaqua, Frackville, Orwigsburg, Schuylkill Haven, Shenandoah, Girardville and St. Clair and other towns in the region. Pottsville Association, which is the parent of the district convention, hired a special train of five cars and accompanied by a full brass band, brought nearly 300 of its members, nearly all of whom were accompanied by their wives. The convention was called to order at 1.30 by President Gruber, who introduced as the presiding officer D. F. Guinan, who delivered an address of welcome, which was ably responded to by A. L. Echert, of Pottsville. The Rev. A. O. Reiter talked on "Home Buying." Lewis Wallner, of Mahanoy City, made an address, subject, "Is It Advisable to Have a Uniform Time for Clearance Sales?" E. J. Cattell, City Statistician, of Philadelphia, made a splendid address. He was followed by Dr. Gregory, of Pottsville, on "Collections." Five-minute talks by Secretaries Krapf, of Tamaqua; H. R. Knapp, Pottsville; J. J. Coyle, Mahanoy City, and Geo. Neidhammer, Ashland; Ira B. Jones, of Minersville, on local conditions and the progress of their associations, was full of interest. Mr. Smedley talked on "Co-Operation," and Mr. Sheldon, district manager of the Bell Telephone Co., talked on "The Telephone, the Merchant and the Consumer." Tamaqua was selected as the next convention city and the date February 22, 1916. The Pottsville "Republican," with its customary enterprise, had a full first-page illustrated account of the convention in the hands of the delegates 15 minutes after the convention adjourned.

Manufacturers were well represented, and it was a splendid social occasion. Lunch was served in the grove after adjournment. The Woolson Spice Co. furnished Golden Sun coffee, the Wrigley Co. had full packages of gum for all, the Diamond Match Co. had souvenirs. All these manufacturers are in the Pennsylvania Plan. There were badges galore. The convention was a success and it will serve to draw the merchants of the region closer together. There should be more of them held in various parts of the State.

The Minersville Association now has 65 members.

James Kirschner is now secretary of the Mahanoy City Business Men's Association.

Frackville, Girardville and Montoursville will be organized in the near future.

Prospects are bright for a big State convention. Look out for a record breaking attendance. You, Mr. Merchant, are welcome. It will pay you.

Organization is power—organize.

NEW YORK CITY

326.—Inspecting Goods After They Are Received; the Buyer's Rights and Liabilities.

Some more law on the buying of goods is brought forward by the following letter:—

Rochester, N. Y.

Elton J. Buckley, Esq.

Dear Sir:—We are having a fight with a New York house over whether we have to pay for some goods which they shipped to us and which we found to be not according to specifications. Perhaps you can get something out of it for your column, and at the same time give us some light.

We ordered certain goods through one of this firm's salesmen. It was a line we had been handling, which a year or so ago had first been bought from samples. All the shipments had been up to standard except the last. When the goods arrived we supposed they were up to sample as usual, and did not examine them at once. About ten days elapsed between the time the goods were received and the time we examined them, preparatory to delivery to our customers. We then found them below standard and wrote the shipper, telling him we would not accept them and would ship them back. This we did, but they refused to receive them and the railroad company is now threatening to sell them for the freight. Who is right? The New York concern say the goods are all right and in accordance with the contract, and that we accepted them.

Yours respectfully,
M—Bros.

This is a familiar situation in every day business and is governed by simple and familiar law. Let me say at the outset that if the goods really are up to standard, this correspondent will have to pay for them of course. They are justified in rejecting them only if they are not up to standard, and not even then if they have been too slow in inspecting and rejecting.

It is a fundamental rule, almost never departed from, that the buyer of goods has a right to inspect them within a reasonable time after he receives them, and that pending that inspection, he cannot be held as having accepted them. These points, however, are of paramount importance:—

1.—He must inspect within a time that is reasonable under all the circumstances of the case.

2.—If he rejects he must at once notify the shipper.

3.—If he either fails to inspect within a reasonable time or fails to notify the shipper promptly, he will be held as having accepted the goods and must pay for them.

I take the following from a leading case which states the law as it exists all over the United States:—

The seller is under obligation to afford the buyer opportunity for examination of the goods, so that he may satisfy himself that they are in accordance with the contract. The buyer has the right of inspection and a tender under circumstances not permitting of an inspection is not sufficient to constitute or excuse delivery or to put the buyer in default. But a refusal to inspect where a reasonable opportunity has been afforded constitutes a breach of contract upon the part of the purchaser. Only a reasonable time is allowed for inspection. The place of inspection is the place of delivery. Taking such possession of the goods as is necessary to make an inspection does not constitute acceptance of them. The buyer must notify the seller of the result of inspection.

Many of the cases turn on what is a reasonable time for inspection. There is no rule about this—it depends on the peculiar facts of each case. I recall one case in which a firm bought goods that were to be delivered by boat. They made no effort to inspect when the boat arrived, but allowed the stuff to be landed and delivered to them. Then they inspected, found that the specifications had not been complied with, and rejected. The court said they were too late with their inspection and rejection. Apparently they could have inspected before the boat unloaded, and when they let it go until everything was unloaded and actually carted into their place, they did not inspect within a reasonable time.

There are also several cases in which goods were shipped via a railroad and where inspection, under the rules of the railroad, could not be made in the freight yard or anywhere on the railroad's premises. In these cases the consignees took the goods to their own stores, which under the circumstances were the only places available, and inspected them there. The point was the same—was inspection done within a reasonable time, or was it waived by taking the goods into the store? The courts have always held that inspection being impracticable anywhere else, the consignee did not accept the goods merely by taking them into his store. He could reject after inspection.

It should be remembered that inspection and rejection are not of any avail whatever without notification to the shipper, which must be just as prompt—in fact even more so, if anything—as the inspection.

It is a good rule to get around to inspecting goods received just as soon as possible after they are received. Prompt action as to this will save many a snarl, if the goods happen to be below what they should be.

Elton J. Buckley.)

Question: * * *, New York.—I hand you herewith contract of Donald-Richard Co., of Iowa City, Iowa, covering a shipment of toilet articles which they sold me. I wish you would have your Legal Department look this contract over and advise me whether in their judgment I will ever be able to get a settlement with them, and if the clause reading "and if the net profits are less than 50 per cent. each year for two years, will pay the difference in cash, provided purchaser has kept the goods tastefully displayed for sale in his store, used the advertising system as provided on the reverse side hereof, made payments as agreed and used reasonable diligence in promoting the sale of goods," is of any value to me. I have looked the contract over carefully and have about decided that I will not be able to get them to terminate it, but did not know but that the clause quoted above would be of some value. Please advise me fully.

Answer.—The Donald-Richard Co.'s scheme was shown up several months ago. It is the old itinerant perfumery (sometimes jewelry) scheme in which a dealer buys an assortment of stuff on a "guarantee" that if his profits from increased business don't reach a certain amount the Donald-Richard Co. will buy the stuff back. This is a note attached to the order which the buyer signs and which the Donald-Richard Co. promptly transfers to somebody else, who collects it, by suit, if necessary. It is an exceedingly good scheme, let alone.

The Donald-Richard Co., which gives its addresses as Chicago, and Iowa City, Iowa, is not rated in the mercantile directories at either place. Its contract is as follows:

Special Agreement.—We hereby agree to buy back at the purchase price all the goods in this order remaining on hand at the termination of this agreement, if purchaser desires, and if net profits are less than 50 per cent. each year for two years, will pay the difference in cash, provided purchaser has kept the goods tastefully displayed in his store, used the advertising system as provided on the reverse side hereof, and made payments as agreed and used reasonable diligence in promoting the sale of goods.

Warranty as to Quality.—We warrant all goods to be the same quality, material and all other respects as samples shown by salesmen. Each article of our manufacture carries with it the following Guarantee to Consumer, "After use by consumer as directed, if this article proves unsatisfactory, we will refund retail price, upon delivery of us, contents one-half used."

Goods Exchangeable.—In order that our customers may always have salable goods on hand, we agree that any goods in this order, hereafter purchased from us, may be returned, after being offered for sale for 90 days, in exchange for an equal value of any goods of our manufacture, at any time within one year from date of purchase. Goods cannot be returned for credit except as herein provided.

Terms.—Six per cent. off in 10 days from date of invoice or above goods can be paid for, one-fourth in two months, one-fourth in four months, one-fourth in six months, one-fourth in eight months, without interest, if a signed agreement for installment payments accompanies this order, which will be returned to purchaser should this order not be approved and shipped, otherwise terms net cash 30 days.

Important.—Our agent is merely soliciting salesman, and all orders are subject to our approval or disapproval at Laboratory. Purchaser must, therefore, see to it that arrangements pertaining to this order are shown herein, as no others will be recognized. Positive no goods shipped on consignment. Privileges herein granted are coditional on purchaser complying with all the conditions of this order. This contract is full of foxes. They agree to buy back the stuff "if profits are less than 50 per cent. each year for two years," but what does that mean? If Mr. Newton had only one article in the whole store at 50 per cent., and another at the same percentage during the second year, his profits would be less than 50 per cent. each year for two years. In other words, they take good care not to "if net profits are less than 50 per cent. each year for two years the investment."

The chief fox is the promissory note for the full amount, which is always collected long before the contract expires. If the scheme is to make good, the Donaldson Co. has the buyer's money, and the buyer is left to get what he wants out of a concern that is not listed in the mercantile agency's directories, and which is located many miles away. The terms and conditions on which the company will buy the goods back—provided purchaser has kept the goods tastefully displayed for sale in his store, used the advertising matter as provided on the reverse hereof, made payments as agreed, and used reasonable diligence in promoting the sale of the goods—are also full of loopholes. I am sorry that I cannot comfort Mr. Newton very much on his prospects.

Question: * * *, Pennsylvania.—Under the vinegar law in this State, I have a barrel of vinegar which I bought, labeled and sold as cider vinegar with a written guarantee under the National pure food law effective January 1, 1907, also under the new Pennsylvania food law approved May 13, 1909, from the man I purchased of, the pure food agent lifts a sample of it notifies me that it does not meet the requirements of the law inasmuch as it is not made exclusively of apple juice or not manufactured according to law, can he prosecute or have me prosecuted if I show him my written guarantee? This question is asked on account of the Pure Food Department making public those who are selling at retail prices pure and suffering from publicity, when they, according to my views, have no reason whatever to have their good reputation sullied in this manner.

Answer.—The vinegar act is a separate act from the food act. The food act contains a provision that no prosecution shall be brought against a retailer if he can show a proper guarantee. Prosecution is then switched to the manufacturer or whoever gave the guarantee. The vinegar law, however, contains no such provision and the Food Department can prosecute the retailer whether he has a guarantee or not. The only use of a vinegar guarantee is to show that you have not wilfully sold adulterated vinegar, and also to enable you to get back at the manufacturer if you have to pay a fine.

Question: H. C. D., Philadelphia.—Have to call on you again; hate to trouble you. The party refuses to have anything to do in repairing fence. I wrote the Building Inspection Bureau. They said I would have to get a permit and it would cost $3. I suppose I would have to engage a lawyer to sue. Supposing I would win, as I don't see how I couldn't, would I get all my expenses, including lawyer's fees and permit? I could repair it for about $5, but hate to give into him, as I wrote him ten days ago to come and see it and he never answered. Just advise what you think would be best to do, repair it or sue. Money is very tight just now.

Answer.—This refers to a former inquiry from the same correspondent in which he asked how he should compel his next door neighbor to pay half the cost of having a fence between the properties repaired.

I should first get the permit and then go ahead and get the fence repaired. The next step is to sue your neighbor before a magistrate for half the expense. It would be best to have a lawyer, for the magistrate may not know anything about the law which makes the adjoining owner responsible in such a case. You could not recover any part of your counsel fee, though the other man would have to pay all the rest of the costs. I advise seeing your Building Inspector and letting him work with your neighbor; probably he can do more than you can.

Question: * * *, Pa.—About thirty days ago an agent for the W. A. Ives Mfg. Co., Wallingford, Conn., had me look over their line of auger bits. He demonstrated with them and showed their good qualities; he repeatedly quoted me the price as being the same at which another well known brand was selling (the Irvin). I signed an order for a small assortment. On receiving the goods I found he had increased the order and the bill amounted to twice as much as it should have been. The price was left out of the order I signed and I have witnesses to prove that he quoted me the lower price. He said he would include some advertising matter, and when I signed the order he had several numbers added below as 1—No. 87, 88. This I thought meant the advertising matter. Instead when the invoice came he had 1 dozen No. 80 expansion bits, 1 dozen No. 81 expansion bits, same $20. Nothing like this was shown me or talked about and it could not be sold here in fifty years.

I wrote the concern and they said they held my signed order and expected me to keep the goods. Now I would like to ask you as a subscriber to your journal to inform me whether you think they can hold me for the whole amount? I offered to take the first part of the order (not the expansion bits) at the Irvin price, but they will not agree. I wrote them to-day that I would return the goods on Saturday, the 28th, if they did not correct order in price and quantity. Should I return them by express as received? Am afraid they will not accept them. Told them I had witnesses to price quotation and would stand suit at court before paying. Please advise what is best to do.

Am inclosing copy of order as signed by me, also invoice and their letter replying to mine. Please return these papers as I will need them. Wish to state that I have been in business here for thirty-eight years and never had any such affair happen. Have never been sued or had any case at court.

Answer.—You say "not written for publication," but I am not going to treat this as equivalent to a positive order not to publish, because the matter is interesting and important, and may warn some other subscriber against this salesman, or this house, wherever the blame lies. I am encouraged to take this liberty inasmuch as I have sent you a reply by mail.

If you can prove all you say you can, you are reasonably safe against any effort on the Ives Co.'s part to collect the full amount of the order. You can be made to take only what you bought, unless you negligently signed an order for more, which does not seem to be the case. It would have been wiser, however, to insist that the price go in the order before you signed it.

I should not return the goods which you did not order, but should notify the Ives Co. that they were held by you subject to their order.

Doesn't This Date Tell You Something?

¶ This is the date Knight's Cooking Extracts first decorated grocers' shelves. Time, skill and experience combined have added to the perfection of these goods each year. If an old lady or a child is sent for a cooking extract without being told to get a certain brand, they'll ask for Knight's by instinct. This name naturally identifies itself with flavoring extracts in their minds. It's a household word and stands for the highest standard of excellence.

I have from F. Brimacombe, Rochester, N. Y., a card which he has written this: "Very little results from this stunt. What is the matter with it?" This is the stunt:

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY!

FOR YOU TO GET THE LOCATION OF . . .

"The Red Grocery Store"

Getting down to "brass tacks," we want to sell you MORE GROCERIES---why we don't is the question. Your name and address on this card may help us in our inquiry. We try to handle the best goods, and do not sacrifice quality for price.

F. BRIMACOMBE.

Of course when a thing has failed it is easy for anybody to formulate all sorts of theories as to why it failed, and all of them will be good because there will be no way of proving them bad. My own theory in this case is that the card fell down because it didn't put its best foot foremost. Mr. Brimacombe can easily try out what I am going to suggest by having the card reprinted and circulated again.

The big point about this card should have been the free soap. That should have been put in the heading, instead of the somewhat tame and trite "A Splendid Opportunity." The other features of the advertisement should have been made entirely subordinate, instead of being given the chief place. I will rewrite the card in a way which I think ought to make it a stronger puller:—

One Cake Brilliant Scouring Soap Free

The only string to it is that you must sign this card and bring it to us. That's all—you won't be even asked to buy anything else when you come.

It's simply our plan of getting a list of names and addresses. Pretty expensive, perhaps, but we hope it'll pay in the end.

I am sure anybody can see my idea here—it is first to make the gift of the soap stand out, and second to convince the reader that it isn't some trap to get him in your store so you can scalp him alive or something. A good many people, on reading the original card, would probably say: "Oh, yes, they want to get me to go to the store and then they'll worry the life out of me to buy a lot of things." I consider that this one point alone might make all the difference between this card pulling and not pulling.

Here is a funny little card that comes to me from Perkins & Scarboro, general merchants of Wendell, N. C.:—

Wendell, N. C., January 20, 1914

REMEMBER:

M. A. Griffin says that W. H. Nowell told him that he heard E. Knott say that G. A. Richardson told him that J. Broadwell heard that there was no doubt that J. P. Richardson said that E. T. Scarborough thought A. E. Lyon had told Dr. A. H. Perry, O. L. Rowland had declared to R. B. Brown that it was generally believed that Lonnie Knott said in plain terms that he had heard John Matto say that his friend Dan Marshburn had said that Mack Hinton informed him that it was well known all over the county that E. Richardson had caught Amos Dean in saying that in his opinion was a positive fact, of great public interest that W. E. Anderson had said C. Z. Todd, told him that Perkins & Scarboro was opening the nicest and cheapest line of general merchandise ever offered for sale in Wendell. Thanking you in advance for your patronage. We beg to remain your friends.

PERKINS & SCARBORO,
Successors to J. E. Scarboro.

This is dated a good while back, but I suppose they are still using it, since they send it to me. It is somewhat apropos of what I said a week or so ago about schemes. This card couldn't get a dollar's worth of business in a thousand years, in my judgment. And yet it is good advertising, in its way, and in its place. It is just another of those novel little things that it pays to fire out once in a while, just to call attention to yourself. Nobody should advertise by such things only, but as adjuncts to regular advertising they are good and help to round out a campaign.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter submitted, in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Salesman Win Sample Baggage Point

The Interstate Commerce Commission, deciding to-day a proceeding instituted by 15 associations of manufacturing, wholesale and retail jewelers against 69 railroads, operating in parts of the country, upheld the contention of traveling salesmen that present regulations defining sample baggage as that carried by commercial travelers "and not for sale or free distribution" are unreasonable. The commission prescribed a new regulation, which did not prohibit occasional sale or free distribution of samples. All the railroads were ordered to cease enforcing the present restrictions on October 15th to substitute this regulation:—

Sample baggage consists of baggage for the commercial as distinguished from the personal use of the passenger, and is restricted to catalogues, models and samples of goods, wares or merchandise, in trunks or other suitable containers tendered by the passenger for checking as baggage to be transported on a passenger train, for use by him in making sales or other disposition of the goods, wares or merchandise represented thereby.

The new order will stand on all railroads and as to all kinds of baggage for at least two years.

Tomatoes are cheap, but not very good. The range is 35 to 40 cents in a jobbing way, with canners paying 10 to 15 cents. Last year they were considerably more.

Window Display Awards Postponed

We made a mistake fixing September 1st as the end of the Lipton Window Dressing Contest. It's a bad time, when clerks or proprietors are away on their vacations.

So many people have told us this, that we have decided to postpone the award of prizes until

NOVEMBER 1, 1915

The contest is for the five best window displays of Lipton's Tea. Here are the conditions:—

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes November 1, 1915.

We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

Bought Simply Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

How to Sell More Rice

Put a sample of Imperator uncoated rice in your window beside a sample of the ordinary rice loaded with talc and glucose, use a placard telling the difference, and see yourself sell rice.

Nobody who once tries Imperator fancy head rice will ever willingly go back to the coated. You have an irresistible talking point which cannot fail to mean larger sales.

Eckman, of Babbitts', Puts in Some Blows for Premiums

Says Much of Current Premium Discussion is Needless, as All a Retailer Needs to Do, if He Doesn't Believe in Premium Plans, is Not to Use Them. Contends That Consumers Want Premiums and Will Respond to Them Every Time.

Unfortunately, some of those who are opposed to premium advertising have not been willing to hear the arguments in favor of the system. In passing resolutions against premium advertising I have noticed that a great many associations have heard only one side of the proposition and have seemingly not wanted to know anything about the merits of premium advertising.

What makes me an ardent advocate of premium advertising is the very fact that interested people, either from a lack of knowledge or because of malice, assail this system of advertising as utterly unbusinesslike, unethical and wrong. To my mind there is as much reason for criticising all retail grocers because they deliver their goods instead of compelling the customer to call at the grocer store for them.

If there is any moral question involved the right is all on our side. The retail grocer will not condemn the methods of a Henry Ford, who insists upon returning to him 10 per cent. or more of the cost of his Ford car bought during the past year. This is true profit sharing in no greater sense than the premium system of the manufacturer.

In speaking of laws, it is really to be deplored that so much of the time of some retail merchants and their money should be spent in getting their States to pass unconstitutional anti-premium laws which only mean still greater expense to the States to defend the laws until upset by the courts.

Do you realize that every State in the Union but one where the question has been up and a number of Federal courts have held that anti-premium legislation is absolutely unconstitutional? A few quotations from the case of People vs. Gillson, the leading case in New York State, will show just what the courts think on this line.

The crux of the situation is found in the words of the judge to the effect that anti-premium legislation "is evidently of that kind which is meant to protect some class in a community against the fair, free and full competition of some other class, the members of the former class thinking it impossible to hold their own against such competition, and therefore flying to the Legislature to secure some enactment which shall operate favorably to them or unfavorably to their competitors in the commercial, agricultural, manufacturing or producing fields."

A favorite argument of the anti-premium people is that the sale of commodities is not advanced one bit by the premiums. One of the principal objections to premium giving on the part of the opponents of the system has been that it does encourage a much greater use of the articles giving premiums. I find that at the last annual meeting of the Illinois Retail Grocers' Association H. B. Herb, president of the Alton Retail Merchants' Association, made the following statement: "Stamps encourage fanatical and wasteful buying, and in many cases without any regard for the economies of buying, the customer purchases merchandise for which he or she has no real use simply to procure the coupons."

Either you are wrong in your statement that premiums do not increase the buying or the great majority of the other opponents of premium advertising are wrong. I am perfectly willing to admit for the sake of argument that the giving of premiums does not increase the actual consumption of the premium goods.

A second point is to the effect that consumers do not want premiums, but users of this argument are often heard admitting that not only the cash customers but even the credit customers demanded the coupons, and that if a grocer started giving them he had to continue it because of the demand of his customers. The most cursory investigation of the actual facts shows that the consumers do absolutely demand the premiums. The fact that over $100,000,000 worth of goods are given out every year as premiums and that any number of large concerns redeem from 50 to 90 per cent. of their premium tokens is proof positive of this fact. I do not mean to say that there are not a great many people who are not interested in the premiums, but taking the masses of the people it is beyond question that they want to get as much as they can for their money.

The argument that the underlying principle on which premium advertising is based is fear may be true to a certain extent, but is no argument against the system. To a very considerable extent the of competition is what compels many a grocer to start a free delivery system and to give better service in many other respects. In fact, it seems to me that practically every one of the arguments that have advanced can be applied to every improvement in service, particularly to all forms of advertising.

You state that it is economically impossible for retailers to exist and do business with the 3 per cent. added to the cost for dispensing trading stamps. Then my answer to that would be for the retailer

Personality Helps the Small Store to Fight the Large One Successful New Jersey Grocer, Commenting on This Paper's Recent Answer to a Retailer Who Asked How He Could Meet Chain Stores, Says He Makes Everybody Who Comes in a Personal Acquaintance and Friend.

[The following from a well-known and successful New Jersey grocer, is apropos of an answer made by this paper in a recent issue to a Pennsylvania subscriber who asked how he should meet chain store competition. The substance of the answer was that the individual grocer's main weapon of defense against the chain store was personal service.—Ed.]

I could not pass your good, sound answer and advice to Mr. W. R. Mason, of St. Clair, Pa., without complimenting you for the splendid editorial you wrote. Nothing else can keep Mr. Mason's trade or my trade or any other merchant's trade except personality and meeting competitors' prices. The store with a great big heart can succeed against the lion or elephant without a heart—the little merchant that is blessed with a good sweet wife to help him, sons or daughters, sisters or brothers, good relations, if he is a merchant himself. He should know his business from a to z, and then the extra help that he needs he can easily supervise himself. Then he does not need to be afraid of the Bell stores or any other chain stores. I defy them all. They can't buy goods much cheaper than I can or any other live merchant that pays and discounts his bills, and if they buy something cheaper, the overhead expenses, as you stated, are extremely high—higher than mine or yours. And some of the chain stores have the rottenest help that I ever saw. Why? Ask some of the chain-store managers how they are getting a week. Their answer would be as much as we probably paying our helpers, when you say they have not a heart I don't think that they even a liver.

I have a host of friends that patronize my store, in fact every one that enters my store is a friend and I make them feel so. I make them feel at home whether they are big or small buyers. They have good cheer and good will whether they ask for a 2-cent stamp or a postal card, and they know it to be a fact. If they don't know it, it would take me very little time to let them know it.

Just let your "Stroller" stop at my store for a stamp and if he has not received with a smile and good cheer he need not pay for the stamp but don't let him try and come back with a $13 suit on. I will turn him out (not quite).

You have my best wishes, I am, Editor. Keep up your good work.

The Quality Biscuits of America

Day and night, persistent national advertising is telling, in every home in the land, the story of SUNSHINE biscuits.

¶ This white-tiled, perfectly equipped factory, with its two thousand windows for light and air, is the tenth in the great national chain of bakeries now operated by the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company. Quality, alone, has built these enormous plants. In them, every variety of biscuit known is made—from soda crackers to biscuit bonbons—while many new and popular kinds, never before produced, have originated here. To the enterprise and originality of the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company is largely due the present enormous consumption of package biscuit which has revolutionized the use and sale of bakery products in the United States.

We extend to every Pennsylvania merchant an invitation to visit any and all of our SUNSHINE Bakeries.

Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Commissioner Gives State Fairly Clean Bill of Health.

In Annual Report Says Almost Every Line is Reasonably Pure Except Vinegar and a Few Other Things.

From the preliminary report of the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Commissioner, for the past year, copy of which has just been received, we take the following summary of samples taken in certain lines and results obtained therefrom:—

OLEOMARGARINE.

The condition existing since the passing of the amendment of 1913, more definitely fixing the color limit for this commodity, continues to be excellent. The special agents have continued diligently to observe the color of the various brands of oleomargarine on sale in the Commonwealth, and have found only a small number concerning which there was sufficient question to justify the purchase of samples for examination. The number of condemnations was 24; nine for selling without a license; one for selling without the proper stamp upon the package or wrapper, and 14 only because of their being colored in the imitation of yellow butter. There has never been a time since the first enactment of oleomargarine legislation, back in the '80s, when oleomargarine was so universally sold for what it is, has been so cheap relative to butter, and its sale so great. In fact, the public use of this material is rapidly on the increase.

BUTTER.

It is particularly gratifying that of more than 100 samples examined as to composition, not one was found to depart sufficiently from the normal composition to warrant being condemned as adulterated. The examinations made for the enforcement of the laws against adulteration does not, of course, involve any examinations as to the grade of excellence of the samples purchased.

RENOVATED BUTTER.

There is only a very small volume of this commodity now on sale on the Pennsylvania markets, and the only prosecution under the Renovated Butter Act was for selling without having first obtained the required license.

SAUSAGE.

Out of the 117 samples purchased for examination, only eight were condemned; three because of decomposition which rendered them unfit for use as food; one because of the addition of sulphur dioxide; one because of the addition of excessive amounts of water, although no starchy binder was employed. The conditions as to adulteration of this class of foods continue to be excellent, as compared with the state of affairs existing prior to the passage of the Sausage Law.

LARD.

Of lard, only a small number of samples were examined during the year, these having been selected because of some suspicion as to their nature. Of these, four were found to contain some cottonseed oil product, and one was declared to be an imitation.

EGGS.

One hundred and sixty-three samples were examined to ascertain their fitness for human consumption. In six cases, of eggs found in bakeries where they had been or were about to be used for making cake, the eggs were found decomposed and unfit for human food. These examinations were additional to those above reported in the paragraph dealing with the enforcement of the Cold Storage Act.

VINEGAR.

The product sold as cider vinegar still continues to show a large proportion of adulteration. The principal adulteration continues to be the addition of water to cider vinegar, and use of some sugar containing material other than apple solids. The instances of adulteration found include several in which syrup vinegar was made from substances other than syrup or molasses. The acetic acid used in these adulterated articles was obtained chiefly from distilled vinegar. As elsewhere stated, 66 convictions were obtained during the year for offenses relating to this commodity.

FRUIT SYRUPS.

Fruit syrups exhibited, in nearly all instances of adulteration of this product, coal-tar dye, giving it a deceptive color; in one case only was the use of artificial flavoring instead of the natural flavor reported.

OLIVE OIL.

Table oils sold as olive oil still continue to show occasional instances of cottonseed oil addition.

Convictions were obtained in six cases of this kind.

FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

Flavoring extracts, for the most part, exhibited a good degree of conformity of composition of the product to the declaration of the label. In six cases only were convictions obtained, chiefly for misbranding, and in one instance because of the presence of coal-tar dye.

CANDIES.

The work of the year included examinations of a large number of candies. In very few cases resinous glaze, once so commonly used, appeared; in eight cases convictions were obtained for the addition of starchy matter where sugar should have been expected. In all, there were 35 convictions for adulteration of this kind of commodity.

FLOUR.

A very large number of flours have been examined. Of bleached flours, in 24 cases convictions were for the addition of nitrous acid.

TIN SALTS.

The very large use of tin-coated containers for the packing and preserving of moist foods has raised a number of questions requiring the very careful consideration of health officers. While tin is much less soluble than other metals when left in contact with substances, such as common foods, it is, nevertheless, not entirely insoluble. In most cases, however, the amounts dissolved are small, and facts thus far established concerning the influence of very small amounts of tin upon human health have not been sufficient to warrant condemnation, which would have worked the pracbanishment of all tin contain-from use for the foods. Such wholesale change would have greatly increased the difficulty of serving foods, and also very greatly increased the container cost which the consumer is obliged to pay as part of the price for the goods he buys. Because of these facts, condemnations of foods as adulterated because of the presence of tin salts has been limited to those cases only in which very large amounts, relatively speaking, of these salts were found present.

No convictions were obtained during the past year because of such adulteration; one in the case of mon and kippered herring and in the case of canned tomatoes.

COFFEE.

During many years past the examination of package coffees has shown a very good condition of freedom of those materials from foreign additions. The sale of the whole coffee bean instead of the ground material has, of course, made adulteration more difficult.
Examination was made of the coffee sold at lunch counters, restaurants, etc., the examination in these cases being made upon the coffee portion of drink, rather than upon the raw material from which it was made. There were 30 cases of adulteration established by these examinations.

GROCERIES.

As a whole, it may be said that the state of groceries continues to show an excellent freedom from adulteration and serious misbrand-

Schemes. Change Their Names
Often and All Use the Note Scheme.

In order to get a closer line on Donald-Richard Co., of Iowa City, Iowa, about which several scribers have inquired, the Modern Merchant and Grocery World" caused an investigation to be made of the concern in its home city, Iowa City. The Donald-Richard Co. sells assortments of merchandise to retailers, on a "guarantee" scheme, insisting that they return promissory notes which it promptly passes to third persons who collect. The report obtained by the investigator employed by this paper is as follows:—

The Donald-Richard Co. is owned by M. F. Price, who also owns the Britan Mfg. Co., the Lyon-Taylor
Co., the Royal Co., the Franklin-ice Co. and the Brenard Mfg.

All of these firms are running exactly the same kind of a business as you have heretofore described in your paper. They change their names often.

They send salesmen out, who artfully secure from the retailers notes in advance. These notes are transferred to a bank or to bank directors, who turn them over to an attorney for collection as an innocent holder, and the retailer is compelled to pay the bill.

WITH THE EDITOR

There died in New York a short time ago a man but slightly past forty who was a successful wholesaler in a staple line. The complaint that killed him was cirrhosis of the liver, caused by excessive drinking. For years he had been a steady, immoderate drinker of alcoholic liquor, claiming that he had to be in order to hold his business. Much of his trade was with hotel people, whom he said kept him up till all hours of the night and made him drink. If this is true, he cold-bloodedly sacrificed himself upon the altar of his business.

A business that one must get drunk in, in order to succeed, is a pretty good business to let alone. Undoubtedly it is the custom in certain businesses to close deals or discuss terms over a drink of whiskey or a glass of beer. It used to be the custom in almost all businesses, but to-day it is so only in a very few. The hotelkeeper or the saloonkeeper with whom you do business expects you to patronize his bar, and if a man is not sufficiently strong as a salesman to refuse and get away with it, there is offense and loss of trade.

Salesmen are combining, and jobbers are combining, in an effort to uplift business—why don't they combine in an ironclad resolution—"I will not drink with customers, nor will I allow my men to drink with them." This would be one combination at least that nobody could call monopoly or restraint of trade. And what a good thing it would be! Alcohol has no more place in business than paris green or arsenic. It has already been greatly eliminated—it should be altogether eliminated.

I have never seen anything more typical of the average collection agency's way of doing business than the following, which is an extract from a letter written by a victim:—

Collection agencies? Well, they had better not solicit my business. I told the last fellow I would not throw water on him if he was on fire. The first one I gave claims to collected them, or some of the best, and though it was nearly five years ago, I have failed to get a single cent. The next collected some claims and sent me the percentage, a very small portion. The next collected one claim of $42.50 and I got $12.50, the balance being used up as charges; the next one—well—I am still working for him; i. e., I collect the claims and he puts in a bill to me for about three-quarters of each one, saying that is their method of settling claims under the agreement.

Condensed into this one man's experience are practically all of a collection agency's shortcomings—failure to turn over money collected, excessive charges for what services are performed, and unfair conditions concealed between the lines of the contract. My advice is never to patronize a collection agency under any circumstances.

Somebody who writes under the name of "A Commercial Traveler," contributes the following fable to an esteemed contemporary:—

It Never Happened.

While in a grocery store on one of the main streets of a Canadian city, a well dressed customer came in to purchase some tea. At the time I was trying to sell the retailer a bill of goods, and of course generously gave way to the customer.

"Have you any real good green tea?" she asked, and awaited the grocer's reply.

This woman was a new customer in the store. She was very finely dressed and I guessed that she had recently moved into the neighborhood. She gave every indication of being a splendid customer to any retailer who would secure her entire trade. She was a woman whom one would expect to ask for the very best of anything in any particular line. That was why she wanted real good green tea, regardless of the price.

"Yes," replied the dealer, "I have a very nice green tea," and he picked up the scoop with somewhat of a flourish, drove it down into a box containing tea and spread it out on a paper on the counter for the customer to see.

"Is this really very fine tea?" she asked. "I cannot tell anything about it by looking at it, but when I taste it I shall know."

"Madam," he replied, "I am sure you cannot get a better green tea in the city—you will certainly find it good."

"What is the price of it?" was the next question.

"Thirty cents a pound;" and then there flashed in her face a doubt as to the quality of the tea. "And are you sure it is really good tea?" she persisted.

The dealer again assured her that it was.

Standing where I was I got a very good look at the tea and as I was somewhat of a judge of the national beverage myself, I could plainly see that it was of a very inferior character. Of course, it was not my duty to say anything and I was compelled to remain a silent onlooker to the conversation. Eventually the customer agreed to try a quarter of a pound.

The sequel to this little story is that that customer never again entered the door of that grocer. I was in a position to know this.

A fable is a picturesque allegorical falsehood, and that is why I call the above a fable. I would be willing to wager almost anything that it never happened. I don't believe that anybody who has sense enough to get into the grocery business would be so idiotically lacking the fundamentals of salesmanship as to offer an obviously wealthy customer, asking for something really good, a 30-cent tea!

This was probably written by somebody whose only capital is imagination.

Retail Price-fixing and the American Fair Trade League

Every reader hereof will remember the recent New York decision in which the court said that the Cream of Wheat Co. need not sell goods to the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. if it did not want to. The Tea Company cut Cream of Wheat in its Economy stores and the manufacturer cut it off itself and asked its customers not to sell it. The Tea Company sued the Cream of Wheat Co., claiming that its act was a monopoly and a trade restraint. The court took about two minutes to say that the Cream of Wheat Co. did no more than it had a right to do—it could not be interfered with in the choice of its customers.

The American Fair Trade League is composed of manufacturers of proprietary articles who wish to compel the retailer to sell their goods at prices which they fix. They have introduced in Congress the Stevens bill, which would give them the right to bring this about.

The secretary of the American Fair Trade League is Mr. Edmund A. Whittier, who of course sees all price questions from the manufacturer's viewpoint. Mr. Whittier issued a statement about the Cream of Wheat case, claiming that it made new law, and meant a new tack on the part of the courts. I had the unutterable assurance to question this, claiming that it made no new law at all, but merely declared what had always been the fixed and fundamental law, viz., that a private trader who had not violated the monopoly laws in any way, could choose his own customers absolutely.

Mr. Whittier has now sent a three-page typewritten statement all over the United States, claiming quite heatedly that I was wrong about this. Perhaps I was. I have been wrong before, and will doubtless be wrong again. But since the question is strictly a legal one, it will require more than the opinion of Mr. Whittier, who is not a lawyer, to convince me of it in this case.

To show me under absolutely no circumstances, forever, Mr. Whittier reproduces his statement extracts from a dozen newspapers, all of whom speak if the Cream of Wheat decision settled the price-cutting problem. When have newspapers been created a Supreme Court to decide legal questions? The opinion of a newspaper on a legal question is worth just as much as Mr. Whittier's opinion, which is worth nothing. I wonder at his cheek in discussing it at all. Even if his opinion was fair and unbiased it would be worthless, but it cannot be unbiased, for he is the paid servant of men who see the question all the way.

By the way, Mr. Whittier, if the am of Wheat decision makes law which helps price-fixing, don't you jump in and use it inst some of the New York cut-
? They seem to be going ahead the same since the "new law" announced.

A Good Idea.

Dayton, Ohio, Aug. 26, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Just a few words about your journal:—

1.—It is the best of its kind published and I guess I take all of them.

2.—The editor's talks are above the average.

3.—Market reports I find helpful because of details.

4.—One suggestion I would like to offer—for one year. Give us as good advice on store management as you have given in "Selling Talks With Clerks." I believe these should come from retail stores, not large department stores, and not from your large Philadelphia stores, but from the men doing $35,000 to $55,000 per year, and from stores at random. Take this for what it is worth. I know it would be a great help to me.

Respectfully,
E. H. McCLELLAN.

This advice is worth a great deal. We shall consider it very carefully.

These People Want Help.

Newark, N. J., Aug. 30, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I wonder if you could not give the Essex County Retail Grocers' and Butchers' Association a write-up in your "Modern Merchant and Grocery World." I am a director in the association. We had a good meeting on the evening of the 24th. We had Mr. Howe, from Kansas City, at our meeting. We are up against it. We have about seventy-five chain stores in our city and we grocers are trying to fight them. How can we do it? You may give us some good pointers in regard to this. We have our meetings every other Tuesday evenings. Give us a good write-up in your next edition. What we want is a good membership, and that is what we can't get. How can we get them? We want them to come to the meetings—how can we get them? It is a hard matter for a few members to fight the battle. We have about 150 members and only 25 turn out at the meetings.

Yours truly,
H. W. STEINHART.

A thousand pages would not cover all that could be said on the various trade problems that Mr. Steinhart mentions. If he has 150 members, a quarter a week from each one would hire a first-class resident secretary. That is probably what they need—an association manager. A man whose sole business is to think about the association and the interests of its members; to devise and work various schemes to keep thing alive and to get new members and get them out to the meetings. From the very first day that such a man took hold, things should begin to warm up. Consider this carefully, gentlemen.

Says He Has Saved Money Through the American Grocers' Society.

Mahanoy City, Pa.,
August 31, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Having seen your challenge in the issue of August 9th, I am writing my experience since being a member of the American Grocers Society. I have been a member since last November, 1914, and in that time have saved $8 to $10 on every $100 worth of goods I bought through the American Grocers Society. My first order sent the American Grocers Society did not amount to $50, and I saved over $6 by it. I have gotten my original investment back several times over since being a member. Also, handling the American Grocers Society coffee I have increased my coffee business 50 per cent., while my profits have been larger than on other brands I sold before buying from the American Grocers Society. You infer that the American Grocers Society uses the members' investments to buy goods, which enables them to make the great savings. Now in answer to your statement if the members' original capital was being used this way, members could not order merchandise on time against the face of their stock, as they now do, for the American Grocers Society wouldn't have any money to left to buy merchandise with.

Your aim is to help the retail grocer, then why do you try to harm our own retail organization that is saving the grocer many dollars?

You invited American Grocers Society members to write you about the American Grocers' Society, and so I have accepted your invitation and ask that you give my letter a space in your columns.

Yours very truly,
JOHN M. ADAMS.

Stock Turn-Over.

Dayton, Ohio, Aug. 30, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you please answer the following questions through your paper:—

1.—How would you advise to figure turn over of stock and why?

Do you say merchandise alone or all moneys invested is merchandise fixtures and delivery outfits? Example: If my stock is $1,800 and a fixtures and delivery outfits $1,700 making a total of $3,500, and I do $3,600 per month, do I turn my stock once per month or two times?

2.—How much business do you say each clerk ought to do per year on a $15 per week salary to make the owner money? I say $9,000 am I too high?

Thanking you in advance.

Yours truly,
E. H. McCLELLAN.

When the turn over of stock referred to, it invariably means the stock of merchandise, not the staple investment like fixtures. Obviously a merchant turns nothing over but his stock of merchandise. If you carry a stock of $1,800 and $3,600 monthly, you are turning your stock almost twice each month making allowance for the difference in buying and selling prices.

2.—A merchant should not figure on a clerk doing a certain amount of business, but on his earning certain profit over and above the expense of keeping him. Obviously a clerk might do $50,000 yearly without a cent of profit, where

The lectures were all on some phase of the question of merchandising, and many of them were exceedingly helpful and interesting. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has made a considerable number of extracts and will present them from time to time in tabloid form.—Ed.]

In considering the matter of the extension of credit, you must not overlook the proper relations of your accounts receivable to the total volume of your sales. To illustrate the point I wish to make, I am going to quote the actual figures of a Minnesota merchant situated in a fairly prosperous farming district:

Gross sales, $35,000; cash sales, $14,500; produce, $8,500; a total of $23,000; leaving credit sales $12,000.

On December 31, 1913, this man had on his books in open accounts rather more than $5,000 for goods sold. In addition he had notes amounting to $5,244, part of which covered real estate sold on time; in other words, this merchant was selling about two-thirds of his goods for cash and its equivalent, and yet he had on his books represented by open accounts and notes somewhere around $7,500 for merchandise sold and not paid for. He stated that he charged his customers 8 per cent. on all accounts that were six months old or more, and then if the customer was good he did not care so much when he paid. I believe this merchant is on fairly safe ground, providing he does not allow his accounts to get too old; but he is not very far from danger.

I am going to give you another instance the actual figures of a real merchant, doing a good volume for the year which showed him a satisfactory profit, his figures at the end of the year indicating that he had a profit of nearly $6,000 on his year's trade; and he figured in every legitimate expense against that business. This man said, using his own figures, goods that cost him $26,950. His cash sales were $22,500, leaving a difference of $4,450. In order to discount his bills it was necessary for this man to collect approximately $4,000, which must be collected from his customers who had charge accounts. In addition to that he will need to collect enough to pay the running expenses of his store if he wishes to avoid borrowing from some one. The point I am trying to make is, that there is a distinct relationship between your cash sales, your credit sales and the total amount of your business. The man who wishes to be able to discount his bills has got to keep this relationship in mind constantly. He must see to it that his cash sales are large enough and that he collects in enough money to pay his bills and running expenses; in other words, there will come a time in the business of most every one when it will be a mighty good thing to chop right down on the credit sales.—By H. K. Zuppinger, who spoke on "Retail Credits."

In figuring fixed charges of a business, one item is salary for ourselves. I am not going to ask what your idea of a salary would be; but any man who can do a business of $30,000 a year is certainly worth $100 a month. So we will put salary $1,200 per year. I could not get any man to run my business and work as hard as I do for $100 a month. There is a difference which comes from realizing it is my own, an energy that I could not hire for $100 a month; so you ought to get for yourself and take out in cash at the end of every month at least $100; and if the business does not pay it to you in cash, you had better get out of it and get with some fellow that can pay you in cash. You should pay yourself, when you are working for yourself, just the same as you would have to pay some one you hired to do it.

Next comes the item of first clerk. I have got to be careful what I pay that clerk. If I pay him too much, he will save up money and in a few years go across the street and start a business of his own, and let me have the dead beats. If I pay him too little my competitor will take him away, if he is any good; and if he is not any good, I ought to fire him. I have got to pay him a salary that is right, not too big, nor too little. We will compromise the matter at $60 per month or $720 per year. That head clerk cannot figure much on the cost of living or he either would not get married or would ask for a raise in salary. Perhaps you can get this clerk to thinking that when this farmer retires he is the man who is going to take his place. With that idea in his head you may get him to figure that $60 a month would be worth more than $75 a month without that idea.

Now comes the second clerk. (He knows more about the business than the boss or first clerk put together.) He is paid $40 a month for that knowledge or $480 per year. You have got to make this second clerk think that in the near future he is going to be the head clerk, but you must keep the head clerk from getting that idea in his head. You encourage him in every way you can without a raise of salary.—By C. M. Johnson, who spoke on "Where My Profits Have Gone."

Did you ever stop to figure how much your lighting bill would be for lighting a store 25 x 50 feet, for instance? We will say it can be operated at a cost in the neighborhood of $1 a day. Now if you can get your store well lighted for a cost of $1 a day, is not that a good investment? If you could sell more goods by employing an extra clerk, you would have to pay him at least $1 a day, and your clerks can sell more and work faster under proper light conditions. So the money spent with the lighting company is well spent. I would not advocate what is frequently done. When a customer comes in begin to turn on the lights. That does not make a good impression, to keep a customer waiting while you turn on the lights. There is one store I know of, unless I go in at noon or on a bright day I am kept waiting fifteen or twenty seconds while a clerk turns on the lights. The owner of that store is a friend of mine and I go in to buy, but I would much rather put in that extra time buying than to stand around while a clerk fools around with the switches. You should either have sufficient lights on all the time or else have the switches so labeled and placed that the clerks can immediately turn on the lights.

Now regarding the color of the light. I want to show you some of the most recent investigations in light of a satisfactory color. We will put on a bluish globe to give what is called the new daylight. It looks blue, but daylight has much more blue light in it than the ordinary artificial light. If you are operating a dry goods store where people come in and want to match colors, it will pay you to have daylight fixtures. If you are operating some other kind of store it is not so important. In a clothing store you might use ordinary globes. Lots of stores use ordinary globes.

I want to caution you on the arrangement of lights. Lots of stores have the lights arranged in a row down the center. It is the cheapest as to wiring, but it is not the cheapest as to lighting a store. The lecturer demonstrated with a model store room how side lights will sometimes help out. Put your lights in two rows and throw the light over each counter.—By Arthur H. Ford, who spoke on "Store Lighting."

Modern Merchant and Grocery World "Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

The New York Letter

Sugar Refiners Don't Want Sugar Added to Free List. Cream of Wheat Case Appealed. Southern Cotton Oil Coupon Case Will be Heard September 13th. Corn Products Co. Sues "Globe" for Libelling Karo. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, September 3, 1915.

It is stated that an attempt will be made on the part of leading sugar refiners to induce Congress to suspend that provision of the recent tariff act placing sugar on the free list beginning May 1, 1916. It is claimed that if this is done the problem of raising additional revenue will be solved. The tariff on sugar has ranged from $55,000,000 to $60,000,000 per year under present tariff acts, and under the recent tariff act it has ranged from $30,000,000 to $32,000,000. This item of revenue will be lost entirely if the law goes into effect at May.

The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. has appealed from a recent decision against it in the Cream of Wheat case and the matter will now be decided by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

The hearing in the injunction suit brought by the United Profit Share Corporation against the Southern Cotton Oil Co. to prevent the company from selling Wesson or kerosene oil without packing coupons was scheduled to be heard in the United States Court in Trenton, N. J., on August 31st. The hearing has been postponed until September 13th.

The sensational articles on pure and impure food which have been published in the "New York Globe and Commercial Advertiser" for several months, having been written by Alfred W. McCann, have resulted in a lawsuit against the publishers of the paper by the Corn Products Refining Co. They sue for $250,000 damages. The Corn Products concern, which is the principal manufacturer of glucose in the United States, claim that McCann deliberately and maliciously misquoted a scientific paper prepared by Doctors Meltzer and Kleiner, of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, and read before the National Academy of Sciences at its recent meeting.

McCann, in his article, said that this paper stated that manufactured glucose is "often fatal" and that it appears in syrups, cheap candy and other products. McCann used this statement to prove that Karo Corn Syrup is injurious to health. The Corn Products Co. say that the McCann articles have been used mostly to get advertising for the "Globe."

The American Specialty Manufacturers' Association announces that its next annual meeting will be held November 17th, 18th and 19th at Hotel Statler, Detroit, Mich.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change the week, all good grades being steady to firm. Demand fair. The poorer grades are neglected and buyers are willing to make concessions on them, but the trade do not seem interested.

Coffee.

The coffee market continues very satisfactory from the holder's standpoint. Another decline has occurred during the week and Santos are now below 9 cents and Arabicas are below 7 cents green and white in a large way. Even at these very low prices the market is barely steady. It is reasonably certain that unless Brazil adopts some sort of a valorization plan to take care of its surplus or the European embargo against coffee is removed, allowing some of the surplus to be shipped there, the market for both Santos and Arabicas will go lower than now. The consumptive demand is small. Mild coffees are unchanged for the week. Washed Arabicas, Bogotas and Maracaibos all steady. Mocha is a shade off now rules at 24 cents in a large way, green. Java firm and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market is unchanged on the same basis as a week ago except that all refiners advanced prices 15 points. This brings cubes 40 points above bulk fine granulated, instead of 25 points as formerly. The price of granulated sugar has risen from 5.50 to 5.60, according to the refiner. Demand comparatively light. Raws are unchanged the week.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose declined 10 points during the week on account of the weakness of corn, due to the fine growth weather. Compound syrup is off in sympathy, but the demand is very light. Sugar syrup is very high on account of foreign demand, domestic demand being as small. Molasses unchanged and quiet.

Fish.

Norway mackerel are worth from 10 cents to $1 a barrel more this week than they were last, due to continued scarcity of spot stock.

Advices from Norway say that the catch of fall mackerel to date is only something over 700 barrels as against something over 10,000 last year. There is almost no North Sea fishing at all. Prices are out on cod, hake and haddock, on about the same basis as a year ago. Salmon unchanged and quiet. It would appear as if spot Alaska salmon was ruling a good deal lower than it ought to rule if the current pack is as small as it is said to be. Domestic sardines quiet and unchanged and not very firm. Imported sardines firm and unchanged in price.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes have taken a sharp advance during the week on account of the bad weather and the comparative failure of the pack up to this time. The market for Maryland 3s in a large way f. o. b. rules from 72½ to 75 cents, which is an advance of 5 to 7½ cents within one week. The weather has been very unfavorable so far and most of the packers have nothing to offer. If conditions improve and the pack is large from now on, the market may recede again, but at present it is very firm. Corn unchanged and quiet. Peas still heavy and dull. Apples unchanged and quiet. California canned goods are still in buyer's favor, both spot and future, on account of oversupply. Demand light. Small Eastern canned goods unchanged and quiet.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes have shown somewhat of an advance during the week, probably an ⅛ to a ¼ cent, due to reports of good foreign purchases. The domestic demand is quiet at the moment. There have also been heavy sales of raisins to go to England and the raisin outlook is steady to firm, as the crop of seedless is said to have been all sold. Other dried fruits are dull and unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are about 10 cents per barrel higher than a week ago, and the quotation in a large way is now $3.20. Marrows, on account of scarcity, have also advanced, and most holders decline to sell under $4.75, although there have been

Success, the Result of Effort

Do not get a name for being indifferent to the welfare of your trade. People are not going to run to the store of the dealer who makes no effort to repay them for their coming. People nowadays are quick to sense such an attitude. They shun the dealer who makes no effort to please them.

"Why don't you try Jones' grocery? You can depend on everything he sells"—is the kind of conversation that spells ruin for one dealer and success for another. It bespeaks lack of effort on the first—presence of great effort on the other.

Sell dependable goods—play fair and your business will grow—your reputation is made. Sell National Biscuit Company products and you are building upon a solid foundation, for N. B. C. goods are known as absolutely dependable. People have confidence in them and buy them by the millions of packages.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

some sales made at about $4.65. California limas unchanged from a week ago, as are green and Scotch peas.

Butter.

There is an active butter market with prices about a half cent higher. The quality of the butter arriving is very good, as is also the consumptive demand. Some little butter is going abroad, and if there is any change in price, it probably will be an advance of a half cent to one cent.

Eggs.

The receipts of eggs have fallen off, and with a very good consumptive demand the market has advanced 2 cents per dozen during the week. At ruling prices the situation is healthy without radical change in sight.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm at an advance of a half cent, due to increased consumptive and speculative demand. The make is normal for the season and a continued good market with a possible slight advance is expected.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are dull at a decline of a quarter cent. Pure and compound lard are steady and unchanged with a moderate consumptive demand. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are unchanged and moderately active.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

Continued unfavorable weather conditions for the tomato crop, both East and West, are becoming serious. The month has been extraordinarily cool, more like September temperature, and there have been a number of heavy rainstorms, accompanied several times by large hailstones. The Weather Bureau predicts more of the same sort of weather for next week, and, at this writing, the temperature stands at 60 degrees, when it ought to be around 90 degrees. Though it is a relief to suffering humanity, it is anything but beneficial to the crops of tomatoes and corn. The growers report that the blossoms on the tomato vines have been destroyed to a very large extent by the heavy storms and cannot "come back." Without blossoms there can be no late fruit. The jobbers have heard the old cry of "wolf" so often that they expect it each season, but this time it may prove to be a reality. The season is young yet, however.

The tomato prophets are predicting a half crop and a dollar market this year. It would be a blessing, perhaps, if it turns out to be a half crop, but it is a long, very long, road to a dollar market. However, there is a basis for a firmer market. The jobbers allowed their stocks to run down to the minimum since the war abroad upset the equilibrium of all the merchandise markets, and they are now ready to replace them with the new goods. An upward movement in the tomato market would be beneficial to all concerned, and a tonic for the whole canned goods business.

It was a tomato market last week to the neglect of the other articles, none of which were active except in a small way. The fancy grade of corn, especially the shoepeg variety, is more than likely to be scarce here next fall and winter as a result of the damage done by the almost continuous storms this summer. The pack of fancy shoepeg was pretty well sold up to the limit of the canning season. Whatever little activity there was in the other vegetables was chiefly in string beans, sweet potatoes and spinach.

In canned fruits the market was a little bit more active this week, but there is no snap to the buying. Straight carload lots for any one article, excepting peaches, were not much in evidence, the same character of buying in small lots prevailing, as heretofore. The canners are packing some very fine quality, select fruit, all yellow peaches, which will find appreciative buyers later on, and the pie peaches and seconds table peaches, also, are better quality this season. New crop pears will be canned early in September. All of the other fruits are ready for shipment when wanted.

Cove oysters were dull, and the prices remain unchanged this week.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

There is a little more life to the evaporated apple market locally, now that we are approaching the drying season.

The domestic markets have bought fair quantities of new goods, paying on a basis of 7½ cents per pound for prime and 8 cents per pound for choice, packed in 50-pound boxes. The movement of old goods out of cold storage has been light. The stock is quotable at from 7 to 9 cents per pound, according to quality.

The raspberry market is steady, and a slight improvement in the demand is noticed. Local stocks are light and are in strong hands. The market is quotable at from 22 to 22½ cents per pound, f. o. b., in barrels.

Imported Fish Specialties.

In regard to Holland herrings, we have no reports whatever this week, and no shipments arriving, because prices are still much too high to allow the import of these herrings, and furthermore, the quality is not good enough to allow shipping during the hot weather. Our Norwegian agents report that several cargoes of Iceland herrings have arrived there, showing exceptionally fine quality, and the herrings were bought up promptly at enormous prices, principally for the German market. Of course, as long as Germany is in the market for whatever fish products may be offered to her, and as long as goods can be shipped without any trouble to Germany from the Scandinavian countries, we shall see high prices here for all fish products. If the Allies, as it is reported to-day in the newspapers, should institute a submarine blockade of the Baltic and thus prevent shipments to Germany from Scandinavian countries, we may see a return of normal prices again for the Scandinavian fish products. In the meanwhile, we shall have to reckon with high prices.

We have no reports from the Norwegian mackerel fishing ground as yet; at least no reliable reports. All kinds of stockfish seem to be scarcer than they have ever been before, and prices are simply enormous. There is sure to be a shortage of supply of all grades of stockfish and very high prices this season.

The sardine fishing in Norway continues in a satisfactory way, and were it not for the eager demand from German buyers, we would have plenty of sardines here at reasonable prices. As it is, we have to bid against foreign buyers, and if we want the goods we have to pay the price or leave them. Of course, the advance in price will not make itself felt here as long as there are stocks here which have been bought at lower figures. It always has been the custom of the American importer not to take advantage of any advance in price until the old stocks which have been bought at low prices have been exhausted, and it is working the same in this case. But as soon as old stocks are cleared, there will be a decided advance in prices of all smoke sardines.

Our agents in Portugal cable that small fish are beginning to make the appearance, and they expect to be able to pack some sardines suitable for the United States. The only trouble is that they will have to ask quite a bit more for their goods than they did in other seasons. Of course, we shall be obliged to pay whatever they ask, because Portuguese sardines are very scarce in this market, and while the demand is not very brisk, there is a good hand-to-mouth business being done right along on those Portuguese sardines. At any rate, no cheap price for Portuguese sardines. This is a fact.

Spices.

The market is fairly active. It is confined, however, to actual current trade needs. Should any unusual demand occur, stocks will be found short. Spot values are really less than goods quoted to arrive.

Pepper.—The market is generally unchanged. There are no special features to report this week.

Cloves.—While in fair demand, remain unchanged.

Nutmegs.—In very active request, steady prices for all sizes and grades.

Cassias.—In steady demand. Saigon and Batavia rather scarce and firm. China grades more active. Prices, however, are unchanged.

Gingers.—In fair demand, at generally unchanged prices.

Green Ginger Root.—In unusual demand at present. Prices continue firm with upward tendency.

Tapiocas.—Rather quiet, but firm prices are prevailing for pearls.

Paprikas.—Very steady and in better demand, with few changes in values.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—This line is much more active than other spices. Celery is in very good demand. Cummin seed is also selling well. Coriander is practically a crop failure. It is very scarce here and prices have advanced 25 to 30 per cent., with higher prices probable. Sage is scarce, especially for the Austrian. Thyme, savory, marjoram rather firmer.

ists of a small amount of pinks and pound tall sockeyes. indications point to the smallest pack of good red Puget Sound sockeyes we ever had. The pack amounts to practically nothing on the Canadian and 35,000 to 40,000 cases will probably cover the entire Puget Sound to date, and these mostly four halves. Market is expected to $1.35 for halves, $1.95 for talls $2.15 for flats.

Shipments of Alaska reds are arriving. A few thousand cases have sold for export at about $1.45. Reports indicate half million cases before previous year. Spot red Alaska probably bring $1.60 shortly after opening.

Look for slightly increased pack of one-pound tall red Kings over last market ruling from $1.20 to $1.25. Columbia River Chinooks.—Pack is all.

We have received about 20,000 cases of new pack of one-pound tall pinks opening prices. About the time you receive this circular we will know whether Puget Sound pink is a success. If it is, prices will be 75 cents higher. If a successful pack is made, we look for the market to be better. The run in Southeastern Alaska generally is very good. Despite strong export demand, market today is 75 cents for carried-over stock. In chums we expect a good pack, as canneries will have some cans remaining to fill. Prices to a certain extent will be governed by the price of

In a general way, this is a season for high prices on sockeyes, reds, Chinooks and Kings, and under any conditions we would have had a pack of pinks, but the shortness of the run up to date is ascribed to extent to washouts on the Fraser River, which destroyed a large amount of pink salmon, preventing them from coming, fish that would have matured some in this year.

Everybody that is a bear on salmon has gone broke. We look for sharp advances after the opening. The great price of trade in favor of America is one of the many factors entering the calculations.

BURK'S Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

When a Fellow Feels His Business Ain't What He Needs.

Every once in a while I find a customer way down in the mouth over something, maybe only a fly speck trifle, and when that happens I'm apt to have a hard luck story handed to me, if I have time to listen to it before my train goes.

One day last week I ran into a fellow who was plumb convinced that his business was on the bum and never would amount to anything, that it was never going to stop raining, that everything was about to bust, and what the hen was the use anyway.

"Oh things are rotten!" he groaned when I asked him how was everything. "I'm getting more and more disgusted with this business."

"Oh pooh!" I said, "I wish you had some business I know of—you'd think you were in Heaven in this store."

"Know anybody who will take this place off my hands?" he said, as gloomy as get out. "I'll give it to anybody who'll pay the debts against it."

"Mean it?" I said.

"Sure I mean it! I'm sick and tired of this narrow treadmill every day!"

"All right, as you meant it, the store's mine," I said with a bright and happy smile. "I'll take my coat right off and give myself an order. Sorry I can't ask you to stay any longer, but I'm going to be mighty busy and I don't like loafers around my store anyway."

Gee whiz, how easy you can call the bluff of these glooms that see nothing but black in the sky and are going to do this and do that with their property. I've had 'em make cracks like that at me before, and my hand always went out to catch what fell, but nothing's fell yet.

"What you want to do," I said, "is to walk up and drink a glass of your own hard cider. Or maybe you go somewhere else when you want good cider. Your liver is lying down on its job; that's all that ails you."

"Nothing of the sort," he said, "I'm feeling all right, but I've been thinking the thing over and I can't see any future in this business at all. I'll always make a living at it; I'll probably make a good living, but there isn't any chance to do big things. It's all small and trifling—you can't pull off great big stunts. To a man who longs for big things it's a constant irritation."

"Why don't you buy a share in some more gold mines?" I said. That was a sore subject with him, and I hadn't ought to have brought it up, but it seemed to fit. In trying to get rid of the trifles and go into something big, he dropped $300 about eighteen months ago.

He didn't come back, so I came out from behind the counter and took up the conversation.

"Old man," I said, "I've always admired you—your beautiful shape and your cute feet, and I'm going to do something for you that I wouldn't do for another living soul. I have a scheme that I did hope to hand down to my children, so's they wouldn't have to worry over money any more. I've been saving it up until they showed they were fit to manage a big thing, but I never could turn away from a suffering friend, and I'm going to hand it over to you. All I ask is that when you've made your millions out of it, you'll once in a while buy my little Willie a straw hat."

Of course he didn't take it in right away, and I didn't blame him at all for reaching to kick me. I'm the most misunderstood man on top of the earth.

"I'll tell you what it is," I said, "it's a scheme to reclaim second-hand chewing gum. I've thought it all out and there ain't a hole in it anywhere. You sell chewing gum—did you ever think, fellow citizens of this grand republic and gents of the Twenty-fifth Ward, what becomes of it all? It is chewed—how long, until it's all gone? Never—it is chewed until the taste has went, and then what? It is thrown away!"

You see, I had gone over the thing so often in my own mind that I couldn't help letting out the speed valve when it came to telling him about it. That ain't my usual way of talking, believe me.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Get Back of the Butter Sales.—Ordinary talk won't do. Ordinary talk won't do much of anything. When you are asked to introduce an article, don't imagine that the work simply means speaking about that article, then feeling that a duty is done. Duty isn't done till the thing is sold to-day, to-morrow or next week.

We listened to a street faker the other night selling raincoats, and the writer remarked what a splendid thing it would be had our clerks half that man's force, half his descriptive powers, half his earnestness. The thing you talk about must come from heart and brain—must be felt all over, must be believed in absolutely. Conviction convinces.

Getting back of the butter sales is to back up your talk with a demonstration. It consists of a plate, a small plain cracker, and on it a piece of butter. It's a most effective follow-up plan. If you will try this one week the result will be surprising and the more success you have with it the more enthusiastic you become. Suppose you sell only five new customers a day through your demonstration. That's 30 a week—30 people using butter on their tables from your store that formerly bought it elsewhere; and mind you, this is only one item.

"It is thrown away," I went on "and for why? Because it ain't of any more use? Sure not, for it of the same use that it was at first. All it needs is to have more flavor put back into it! D'y'e see the thing dawning on you, old man? Why I saw as plain as could be your liver turn over and begin to pump while I was talking!"

"What I'd do," I said, "is to offer coupons or something for all the used chewing gum I could get. The big thing about the scheme is that you can use it over and over again—it don't use up. All you got to do is to pump a little more flavor into it every time."

I waited a minute for him to throw his arms around my neck and kiss me, but he put that off for the present, and I went on.

"Another sweet thing about it that you'll never know who had the gum before," I said. "It might have been Lydia Pinkham or William Taft for all you know. It was

What we all need to do, gentlemen to get away from this eternal sameness in doing things.

Standing back of a counter with a gracious smile and a polite manner taking orders and wrapping up goods is right and proper, but it isn't salesmanship necessarily.

If a woman orders a sack of nationally advertised flour, with every grain cutting the life out of it, isn't it good business to talk "our own," and is it a good idea to pick up the sack cover and show her a loaf of bread made from this flour, and by the way, token, offer her a piece spread with butter of yours?

Every time you change a customer from using a profitless flour to one that represents a living margin, you most assuredly increase your efficiency. You feel better for it. You feel that though you were breaking loose from the machine man to the business man, and this breaking loose game is what every merchant appreciates in his employees, unless he happens to be a member of the very old school. And the few of them left, good, honest salesmen that they were.

Let me know how you made out with the butter idea, anyway.

327.—Avoiding Being at Salesmen's or Solicitors' Mercy.

A Pittsburg firm write me that they are facing a very serious problem on which they wish some suggestion through these articles. They do not wish me to reproduce their letter, or to give their name, but I am permitted to state their problem in a general way.

They use a large number of salesmen and are practically depending on them for their business, which appears to be somewhat peculiar, in that very few of their customers ever come in to the store. Almost all of their business, therefore, comes in through salesmen, and like many concerns, they are at their salesmen's mercy in a very large degree. I have known of other cases like this. In one of them a concern was practically destroyed over night by a strike of all of its salesmen. In the end it managed to gather something from the wreck, but the condition into which that house was plunged by the leaving of its salesmen was the greatest possible revelation of the danger any concern exposes itself to if it lets its trade go to its salesmen rather than to itself.

The Pittsburg concern has had considerable trouble with salesmen leaving and joining a rival house in the same line of business. Naturally, their acquaintance with the trade was their chief asset, and they capitalized it all they could. Some efforts had been made by them in past cases to stop salesmen from doing this, but they had not been very successful, and the concern writes that there is some reason for believing that it is going to lose six of its best men, who are talking of forming a company of their own to go into the same business, with of course, if possible, the same customers. I am asked to say how a house dependent wholly or in part on its salesmen can tie those salesmen up so that they may not suddenly depart and take all the trade with them.

I can of course see the very great need of such protection, and I am glad to say to any one who is interested that the thing can be done, not completely, but to a very useful extent, by the right kind of a contract keeping salesmen off their old customers when they take a new place, or even when they engage in business for themselves.

The courts do not like these contracts, for they savor of restraint of trade, but they will enforce them nevertheless if they are reasonable and properly drawn. I have never known one case, however, in which a salesman was compelled to stay away from his old customers, unless he had contracted to do so, preferably in writing. Let me make that emphatic. A salesman engages with a house to solicit new customers. There is no contract binding him not to solicit the firm's customers if he leaves. He works up a good list, being of course paid for his work. Receiving a better offer, he takes himself—and seeks to take his list—to a new employer. No matter how unfair that may seem, no matter how hurtful it may be to the old employer, the courts will not interfere, because the salesman never contracted not to do that very thing. It is only grudgingly, anyway, that the courts will interfere with a salesman in such a case, and all the conditions must be right before relief will be granted.

Which means not only that a contract must have been made, but that it must have been a reasonable contract. I heard a case argued recently, in which an appeal court, apparently with considerable satisfaction, threw a restraining contract of this sort out of court. It had been made by a big laundry concern with its solicitors, and bound them if they took another position, never to solicit their old customers for the new house. The employer had over-reached himself; the court said the contract was unreasonable. Had it bound the solicitors not to go after their customers for six months, or even for nine, it would almost certainly have been upheld.

In a case of this sort which happened recently in my own experience, I had some trouble to convince an employer that six months' protection was plenty. Certainly if a house cannot go in and bind its former salesmen's customers to self in six months, it can never it.

The point about a contract like this is that it must go no further than will give the employer proper protection. If it oversteps that limit it will be considered undue restraint of trade and will be thrown out. What will be proper protection varies in different cases. A physician selling his practice, who was all local, would not be held to a contract by which he bound himself not to practice medicine within ten miles for a certain period. Manifestly, the contract was unnecessarily wide. Otherwise, had a selling physician been of the roving type whose practice roamed over ten miles of territory. Of course where it is a case of a salesman calling on certain trade, that point of it is easy—he is simply to keep away from any customers whom he called on for his old house. The period of exclusion is the moot point then. It is not safe to make longer than six or nine months, and three months is safer.

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Preserving Supplies Display.

Here's a seasonable display. It will be a relief to you if you have been having perishable goods displays—easy to arrange neatly. Cover the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. Make a background in the rear of the window with different sized fruit jars, making another row on top of them like the illustration, between the boxes on the second row. Put paraffin and jar rubbers on the top of the boxes of fruit jars. In the very front of the window place little dessert dishes of loose spices, with the price tag per ounce on each dish. Place a family scale with the scoop full of granulated sugar on it in the center of the window. Arrange little pyramids of package spices around, and on each side of the scale place little bundles of stick cinnamon. Fill in any bare spaces, if there are any, with different size bags of sugar; for instance, twenty-five, ten, five and two-pound bags. Suspend a large sign card like the illustration.

Franklin Carton Sugar Is Ready to Hand Out to Customers

When you have slit the top of a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR with your pocketknife (and that's easier than taking the head off a barrel), the CARTONS are ready to hand out to the customers with no more work than if they were cans of tomatoes.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR saves you all the work of putting sugar in bags, saves the cost of the bags, the cost of twine, saves time, prevents loss by overweight. The CARTON is a neat, tight, strong package that will not burst like a paper bag and let the sugar out. It keeps the sugar clean and dry and your customers will appreciate those features. FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR pays you a profit because it costs you nothing to handle; bulk sugar does not pay you any profit because of the cost of handling. You can make a profit instead of a loss on all your sugar trade by handling FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR as we pack all fast selling grades in the FRANKLIN CARTON, including FRANKLIN GRANULATED, FRANKLIN CUBE, FRANKLIN DESSERT & TABLE, FRANKLIN XXXX CONFECTIONERS' and FRANKLIN POWDERED.

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 pounds

Wilksburg, Pa., August 19, 1915.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—What is your opinion of circulars similar to the inclosed mailed weekly? Your advice would be appreciated.

Yours truly, THE KUHN CO.

The circulars inclosed were mimeographed on plain paper. They were about the size of a large letterhead, and I am reproducing one of them in reduced form:—

done. This work of the Kuhn Co.'s is neat and clear and I believe should bring results. The saving of expense is a big item in advertising of this sort. Anybody can own and operate a mimeograph, and if he doesn't also own a typewriter, he can get his original sheet typewritten somewhere near at very slight expense.

ing, but mimeographing is at least more personal than printed matter, if not as much so as typewriting. Advertising of the personal, intimate type—the chatty sort in which you use the first person singular in addressing customers, will go with much more force if done in neat mimeographing than if put into type. There is a psychological reason why this is so. I suppose the main factor is that mimeographing suggests the idea that it was done in the store, as it probably is in most cases.

The only change I would suggest in the typographical arrangement of this work is that the headlines be put in capitals instead of capitals and small letters. Let them be underlined just as they are now.

I want to say a word to the Kuhn Co. about economy in the use of words. They can sharpen up their advertising considerably by making a point of cutting out unnecessary words. Read their "Premier Salad Dressing" paragraph and then read the following. It is the same thing, but with seven words cut out:—

Premium Salad Dressing.

Has any one told you about Premier Salad Dressing? We have seldom sold anything that met with such instant approval. Within a few weeks it has taken the place of some of the oldest brands. An olive oil mayonnaise, light, cream and mild.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter, in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Dry Goods Business Fair.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Wholesale dry goods distribution has not been as heavy this week during the corresponding week a year ago, although the number of buyers in the market has been about the same.

The outlook for supplies of imported lines of merchandise was not at all promising a year ago on account of the war and consequently caused a great rush of buyers to the market and created heavy sales.

Conditions this year surrounding supplies of merchandise are well known, so that it is only natural that immediate distribution would not compare with that of a year ago.

Merchants continue to feel optimistic toward fall business.

Collections are about normal.

Shepard's Fly and Insect Exterminator.

If you have too many ants, flies etc., here is your chance to get rid of them at one fell swoop. This Preparation comes in liquid form and has the refreshing odor of Pine Tar. The manufacturers claim it is actually beneficial to humans, but we do not go so far as to say that, however, experience has shown us that it will destroy flies almost instantly. We sprayed a little in a closed room and the flies, in a few minutes, perished miserably. Also for bed bugs, moths etc. Used and endorsed by Hospitals. the bottle .50

When a tin of "OLD MONK" is in every refrigerator in Wilksburg, we will stop talking about it. If you are still paying a dollar a quart for some advertised brand of Olive Oil, when you can get "Old Monk" for that price, you are paying too much for the quality you get. We have just received a fresh shipment and the price is one dollar the quart, and you should order one today.

I have always believed in advertising of this style, always provided it is neatly done. I have seen some mimeographing work sent out to customers which could scarcely be read—it was so blurred and badly

Will You Answer This Grocer's Question?

We want as many of our subscribers who will, to answer question propounded below. We have an answer to it, and in due time we shall make it, but first we want other grocers to answer.

What should Mr. Wenger have done—given in to his greedy customer or stand his ground, as he did?

Chambersburg, Pa., August 29, 1915.

To the Editor.

This is how I lost a good customer. Did I do right?

I had a customer buying about $25 a month, paying at first of every month. I considered him one of my best. But this occurred. My clerk took his order as usual; with it was a gallon of vinegar wanted. The clerk put in four quarts, as I told him to, and delivered it. Shortly afterwards the customer came back and put up a kick stating that he didn't get a gallon and accusing the clerk of giving him short measure. I told him I would get the jug and give him a standard gallon of four quarts. He consented. I gave him four quarts standard measure, and told him what the contents were. He still insisted he had been given short measure, because when he received a gallon of whisky in that jug the distiller always filled it. What more could I do? I gave him four quarts standard measure and had to let him go, a dissatisfied customer. At the end of the month he paid his account as usual and quit dealing with me.

Rather than fill that jug, which holds more than a gallon, for a gallon, I let him go. Did I do right?

Yours truly,
E. G. WENGER.

Window Display Awards Postponed

We made a mistake fixing September 1st as the end of the Lipton Window Dressing Contest. It's a bad time, when clerks or proprietors are away on their vacations.

So many people have told us this, that we have decided to postpone the award of prizes until

NOVEMBER 1, 1915

The contest is for the five best window displays of Lipton's Tea. Here are the conditions:—

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will give to the five retail dealers who make the most attractive window displays of Lipton's Tea before the end of this contest, the following cash prizes:—

For the Best	-	-	-	-	$75
For the Second	-	-	-	-	$50
For the Third	-	-	-	-	$25
For the Fourth	-	-	-	-	$15
For the Fifth	-	-	-	-	$10

CONDITIONS:

1. The display entered in the contest must be of Lipton's Tea alone.
2. The display must remain in the window one week.
3. Each contestant must send to this office a photograph of his display or a careful detailed description of it. Naturally a picture would be better, though a contestant need not incur that expense if he does not wish to. Almost every family now has a kodak-user in it who could photograph a window display.
4. Each contestant if he decides to enter the contest, will kindly drop this office a postal card to that effect.
5. The contest closes November 1, 1915.

We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

Deliver Your Goods in Sanitary Metal Baskets

These baskets are made of galvanized iron, reinforced and strengthened so as to last a long time. Being perforated, they are self-cleaning, also useless to the housewife enabling you to sell your wooden boxes.

Sanitary Galvanized Iron Metal Baskets are economical because they save space; durable, will outlast three of the old kind; modern, brings delivery system up to date; cleanly, no place for dirt to stay.

Price, $4 to $6 per dozen on baskets holding from one to four pecks. Order to-day Sanitary Metal Basket Co., Lafayette, Ind.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes—is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

Where the Glass Jar Comes In

The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is unusual.

No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass before; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market
